HAMILTON,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BOTHWELL AND DALSERF, AND THE VILLAGES OF LARKHALL, QUARTER, AND UDDINGSTONE.

HAMILTON is an ancient town, royal burgh, and the capital of the parish of its name and of the middle ward of the county; 37 miles W. by S. from Edinburgh, 10½ S.S.E. from Glasgow, 15 N.W. from Lanark, 8 S. from Airdrie, and 7 N. from Strathaven; it occupies an eligible site on the roads betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle, and Edinburgh and Ayr, and a pleasant situation in a highly-cultivated country, washed by the Clyde and the Avon. The town lies along the base of a rising ground, extending nearly a mile in length, and consists of several streets of substantial well-built houses—not very regularly disposed, but handsome in appearance; and the whole town has an air of comfort, respectability, and activity. Of late years many improvements have been effected in the town and neighbourhood, and it is rapidly increasing in population and importance. A line of street has been opened through the town, forming part of the London road; a bridge, called Cadzow bridge, has been thrown across the ravine, thereby avoiding the lower part of the old town; and a railway has been laid down from Glasgow, which has proved the means of opening the vast mineral field in the vicinity of Hamilton. Among the public buildings will be recognised the handsome town-hall, in form of a Roman temple, with appropriate offices, and a gaol. The town is lighted with gas by a company, and there are works for supplying the inhabitants with water.

The moderate distance of Hamilton from Glasgow has facilitated the introduction of weaving cotton goods here to a large amount; the lace trade is carried on to a considerable extent, and the prosperity of this business has been greatly augmented by improvements There are five banking establishments prosperously settled in this burgh, namely branches respectively of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Bank of Scotland, the City of Glasgow Bank, the British Linen Company, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland. In the fifteenth century, Lord Hamilton erected the town into a burgh of barony; Queen Mary created it into a royal burgh in 1548, but after the Reformation, the rights and privileges thus acquired from the Crown were resigned into the hands of William Duke of Hamilton, who in 1670 restored to the community its former franchises, and erected it into a burgh of regality dependent on him and his successors. The government of the burgh is vested in a provost, three bailies, and nine councillors; and in connection with Lanark, Airdrie, Falkirk and Linlithgow, it sends a representative to Parliament; the present member is James Merry, Esq. The justices of peace hold regular courts for the trial of minor offences. The places of worship are churches of the Establishment, Free and United Presbyterian churches, and Independent chapels. The old parish church was made collegiate in 1451, by Sir James Hamilton, for a provost and prebendary, it has always been the place of sepulture of that family. The great objects of attraction in this part of Lanarkshire are the palace of the Duke of Hamilton, and its surrounding pleasure grounds: the building forms three sides of a quadrangle; the rooms are spacious, particularly the picture gallery, which contains the finest collection in Scotland. In the middle of the great park, one mile from the town, on a rock overhanging the Avon, stand the ruins of Cadzow Castle, the ancient manor house; the park is well stocked with deer, and bears a number of stately oaks. Amongst the charitable institutions of Hamilton are two hospitals, for the reception of a certain number of old men—the one endowed by the noble family above mentioned, the other by a Mr. James Robertson; there are likewise two orphan schools, some friendly societies and a masonic lodge. In the vicinity, to the west of the town, on the road to Bothwell, are spacious and handsome barracks; and on the banks of the Clyde is an extensive race-course, on which horseraces occasionally take place, and the meetings are noted as among the best attended in Scotland.

QUARTER is a small village in Hamilton parish, two miles distant from that town. The weekly market for Hamilton is held on Friday; and the fairs on the second Thursday in February, the first Friday after the 15th of May, the last Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in November (old style). The hiring and cattle markets are held on the third Friday in April, and the third Friday in October; and the annual cattle show about the beginning of June.

BOTHWELL is an ancient village, in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Hamilton, between eight and nine miles from the former and between two and three from the latter town. The parish is of an oval form, about eight miles and a half long by four broad; the great roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and from Glasgow to Carlisle, and the Caledonian Railway pass through it; and besides the river Clyde, it is intersected by the two Calders, which are beautifully skirted with wood. Throughout the parish coal is found in abundance, and several collieries are in full operation. Near the village, towards the west, on the side of the Clyde, is the modern mansion of the late Lord Douglas, now in possession of the Earl of Home, standing in the midst of shrubberies and plantations; contiguous to which, on an eminence, is the magnificent ruin of Bothwell Castle, once a most important Scottish fortress, much admired by all visitors. The road to Hamilton is carried over the Clyde by means of Bothwell bridge, a name famous in Scottish history from this being the spot on which the Duke of Monmouth routed a formidable army of covenanters on the 22nd of June, 1679. The ancient church of Bothwell was founded by Archibald, 'the Grim,' Earl of Douglas, in 1398, with liberal endowments for a provost and eight prebendaries. An elegant church was erected by the heritors of this parish; it is in the Gothic style, and exhibits a fine appearance as seen on approaching the village from Hamilton.

DALSERF is a parish in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, on the west bank of the Clyde, its greatest length is 6½ miles, and its greatest breadth 4½. The soil is generally fertile and well-cultivated, and coal is found in abundance. The only village deserving notice in the parish is LARKHALL, three miles from Hamilton, on the great road from Glasgow to Carlisle. In this village many looms are employed in the weaving of fancy fabrics for Glasgow houses; and the large bleach works of David Crawford Miller are situated here, giving employment to a large number of hands; altogether the parish has every appearance of prosperity.

UDDINGSTONE is a thriving village in the parish of Bothwell, four miles north-west from Hamilton. The road from Glasgow to Carlisle passes through the village; and it has a station on the Caledonian Railway. There are two iron foundries, and two establishments for the manufacture of agricultural implements, of which that of Messrs. J. Wilkie and Co. stands pre-eminent. The village is lighted with gas, and presents an appearance of neatness and good order.

HOLYTOWN,

BELLSHILL, MOSSEND, NEWHOUSE, SALSBURG, TILLINGBURN, SHOTTS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HOLYTOWN is an extensive village, 'and quoad sacra parish,' disjoined and formed into a separate ecclesiastical district, though still rated in the parish of Bothwell for parochial purposes, it is also in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, and 10 miles east from Glasgow. The village derives its chief support from the extensive collieries in the neighbourhood, and the Mossend Iron Company's Works, which gives employment to a large number of persons. There are places of worship of the Establishment and of the Free Church in Holytown, also a parish and a colliery school. A station on the Caledonian Railway is within half a mile of the village.

BELLSHILL is a large village in the parish of Bothwell, one mile west from Holytown, on the through road to Glasgow. Like Holytown its chief support is derived from collieries in the vicinity. The United Presbyterians and Evangelical Unionists have places of worship.

NEWHOUSE is a hamlet, one mile west from Holytown.

SALSBURG, or Salzburgh, is a village in the parish of SHOTTS, three miles east from Holytown, it is a place of no importance. The Original Secessionists have a place of worship here.

TILLINGBURN is a hamlet, two miles from Holytown. The works of James Munro, agricultural implement maker and machinist, are situated in this hamlet.

The parish of SHOTTS lies in the north-east corner of the county, and is 14 miles in length, by about 10 in breadth, bounded by New Monkland on the north, Bothwell on the west, Cambusnethan on the south, and the county of Linlithgow on the east; the Amon and the Aven have their sources within the district, which is likewise watered by the streams of the North and South Calder, running through the extensive reservoir and Lilly Loch, which supplies the Forth and Clyde canal, as likewise several mills. The parish abounds in coal and limestone. The church stands on the south road between Edinburgh and Glasgow, on a bare and elevated part of the district, 15 miles from Glasgow and 27 from Edinburgh. There is a school here, endowed by the late Mr. Wilson, of Whiteburn.

KILBRIDE (EAST), MAXWELTON, & CARMUNNOCK.

KILBRIDE is a market village and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Muirkirk, 8 miles S. from the former city, the like distance N. from Strathaven, between 6 and 7 S.W. from Hamilton, and 45 W. by S. from Edinburgh. The parish, which comprehends the abrogated one of Torrance, contains some extensive lime-works, and coal also lies beneath the surface. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. The places of worship are the parish kirk, the United Presbyterian church, and the Free kirk. Kilbride has produced several eminent men, among whom are found Dr. Wm. Hunter, and his brother, Mr. John Hunter, the celebrated anatomist and physiologist. There are two good schools, the parochial school in KILBRIDE, and one at MAXWELTON, a short distance from the town, the latter being endowed by Sir Hugh Maxwell, Baronet, of Calderwood Castle. A market is entitled to be holden here on Tuesday, and four annual fairs; only two of the latter are now observed—these take place in June and November. There were also large sheep markets held here in May and June; they have been discontinued, with the exception of one on the last Friday in May (old style), which is still well attended; on that day, likewise, the Farmers' Society exhibits prize cattle.

The parish of CARMUNNOCK lies on the north-western confines of the county, on the east bank of the White Cart river, having Kilbride on the south, and Cambuslang on the east; it is four miles in length by three in breadth. The ground is partly arable and partly pastoral, the banks of the Cart presenting some fine woodland scenery. On the estate of Castlemilk (the proprietors of which are supposed to be lineal descendants of the royal house of Stuart) are the remains of a Roman military road; and many tumuli have been met with, which when opened, have always been found to contain human bones and instruments of war. In the house of Castlemilk, which is noted for its fine situation, Mary Queen of Scots is said to have lodged the night before the battle of Langside. There is a place of worship for the members of the Established church, also a Parochial school. The parish supports its own poor by voluntary assessment.

LANARK,

WITH NEW LANARK, KIRKFIELD BANK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANARK is a royal burgh, market town, the capital of the county and parish to which it gives name, and the seat of a presbytery; 32 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 25 S.E. from Glasgow, 15 S.E. from Hamilton, and 11 N.W. from Biggar, situate on the main road from Stirling to Carlisle, and one mile above the left or east bank of the Clyde, and from whence there is a branch of the Caledonian Railway, communicating with the main line at Carstairs Junction. It is a place of great antiquity, and is the spot where the first assembly of Parliament mentioned in the history of Scotland was convened by Kenneth III. in the year 978. It is said to have received its original charter from Alexander I. and it is certain that it was a royal town as early at least as Malcolm IV. Many of the ancient Scottish kings made Lanark (or Lanerk) their residence; and at one period there stood a castle on an apparently artificial mount at the bottom of the present Castlegate, the summit of which elevation is now converted into a bowling-green. Lanark possesses interest as having been the scene of the first decisive military enterprise of the celebrated Sir William Wallace—that patriot having here commenced his glorious (though personally unfortunate) career, by the defeat and death of William de Heselrig, the English sheriff of Lanarkshire, in 1293. We are told that Wallace having married a lady of the name of Braidfoot, the heiress of Lamington, resided with her privately at Lanark—that while there, he, with a few friends, had a quarrel and conflict with some officers of the English garrison. The party of Wallace being overpowered by numbers, he made his escape to Cartlane Craig—on which the sheriff seized on his wife and put her to death. To revenge this barbarous atrocity, Wallace and his friends attacked the sheriff in the night, and mas-acred him with two hundred and forty Englishmen. Bruce finally recovered Lanark from the English in 1310. The present town is principally composed of one line of streets, descending from east to west, bearing the respective names of High-street, Bloomgate, Westport, and Hope-street, the latter, leading northwards, contains the county buildings; besides these, there are smaller streets diverging, and several lanes and closes. The main line contains many good stone buildings of respectable appearance, and well-furnished shops; the whole being suitably lighted with gas, supplied principally by the Lanark Gas Consumers' Co. limited, and a second gas-works situate at Steel's Cross, is in the hands of a lessee. The general occupation of the inhabitants is hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers; nailmaking is carried on to some extent. There are also two breweries, four branch banks, and several good inns. There are also barracks for the county militia. Within a short distance of the town, the North British Oil and Candle Co. limited, erected and have now in full operation extensive works for distilling and refining paraffin oil, and the manufacture of candles, grease, &c.; and close by the railway station is the fancy wood work establishment of Messrs. Archibald Brown & Co. where a great variety of fancy articles are manufactured from wood, and tastefully ornamented in tartan and various other patterns. Behind the Clydesdale Hotel are the Assembly Rooms, erected in 1827, on the site of which stood an ancient monastery of Franciscans. The County Buildings, erected in 1836, at an expense of upwards of £5,000, are situated in Hope-street, and are a great ornament to that part of the town; they are in the Grecian style of architecture, with a noble front of freestone, and comprise commodious courtrooms and appropriate offices; the gaol is situated at the rear of the courthouse. As a royal burgh, whose charters were finally confirmed by Charles I. in 1632, it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a town-clerk, a treasurer, and twelve councillors; it unites with Hamilton, Lanlithgow, Airdrie, and Falkirk in returning one member to Parliament. The sheriff's court is held in the County Buildings every Tuesday and Friday during the session; a justice of peace court on the first and third Monday of each month; one for the burgh every Friday, and a general county meeting takes place annually in the same edifice on the last day of April. The places of worship consist of the Parish church, which stands in the centre of the main street, and a Quoad Sacra church at St. Leonards, a Church of England in Hope-street, two United Presbyterian, a Congregational church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. In a niche over the eastern door of the parish church is placed a colossal statue of Wallace, executed and presented to the town by Forrest a self-taught genius. The remains of the old parish church, which are situate at the distance of a mile eastward of the town, have been deserted for more than eighty years; tradition asserts that in this structure, at public worship, the heroic Wallace first saw his subsequently murdered wife. In the cemetery which surrounds the church was interred William Lithgow, a celebrated and eccentric traveller of the reign of James VI.; after his peregrination through a great portion of Europe and Asia, he came home miserably mutilated and disfigured by the inquisition, and settled in his native parish till his death. The principal educational institutions are the Grammar school, supported by the corporation; Wilson's Free school, endowed by a lady of that name, in the year 1818, for the education of twenty-five boys, and the like number of girls; and the Broomgate Educational Institution. Lanark has ever possessed considerable attractions to the visitor and the tourist, from the beautiful undulating scenery and the romantic grounds at Bonnington, and the falls of Clyde. The falls of Corra, where the water takes three distinct leaps, making altogether eighty-four feet. A little further is Bonnington fall. About a mile to the north of the tower is a very old arch, supposed to have been erected either by the Picts or Romans. A fine view of Cartlane bridge, erected in 1822, is obtained her , and Cartlane Craigs, a deep and rugged chasm, evidently formed by a convulsion of nature, will be an interesting object to the visitor. The neighbourhood of Lanark is adorned with many mansions of the nobility and gentry; and at Lee Castle, the seat of Sir Norman M'Donald Lockhart, Bart. is to be seen the curious stone called the 'Lee Penny,' which is said to have suggested to the late Sir Walter Scott the idea of his celebrated novel the 'Talisman.' Horse races are now held on an extensive and excellent course, about a mile and a half east of the town. In the vicinity is a handsome sheet of water or loch, from which the town is supplied with water by means of a pumping engine, its margins have been embanked and planted, and an excellent footway formed close by the water's edge, rendering it an attractive and delightful promenade, much frequented by the inhabitants. The market day is Tuesday; fairs, the last Wednesdays of April, May, and July (old style), the Thursday after the second Monday of October, and the first Wednesday of November (old style), all for cattle and horses, and lambs in the season.

NEW LANARK is a very neat, regular, and well-built village, about one mile south from Lanark, on the same side of the Clyde as that town. It was founded by Mr. Dale in 1785, that gentleman having erected the first of the present range of cotton mills, and constructed a subterraneous aqueduct, about one hundred yards in length, through the solid rock—by which means he brought the waters of the Clyde on the sloping plain on which the mills and the village now stand. The 'Institution,' as it is called, is the school for the whole village, where the proprietors compel the inhabitants to send all their children from the age of three to the age of thirteen. The late great (and by many considered mistaken) philanthropist, Owen, was long a principal proprietor of these extensive mills; he made great efforts and sacrifices for the good of his work-people, and it is to him that the inhabitants owe their present educational institution, which, in effects and results, as regards the morals of this community, have worked admirably. The factories of New Lanark, and its instructive establishment, are now objects of curiosity to all tourists; and indeed strangers would deprive themselves of much gratification if they left this part of the country without paying them a visit.

KIRKFIELD BANK is a handsome village in the parish of Lesmahago, situated on the left bank of the Clyde, about a mile and a half from Lanark. The principal occupation of the inhabitants is hand-loom weaving. A steam-loom factory is also in operation, and employs a number of hands. The scenery in this part of the neighbourhood is very romantic, and frequented by many visitors.

LEADHILLS.

CRAWFORD, CRAWFORD-JOHN, AND ABINGTON.

LEADHILLS is a village in the parish of Crawford, 46 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 44 S. from Glasgow, 12 from Douglas, and 16 N. from Thornhill, situate in the alpine region, amidst a wilderness of dismal heathy mountains, on the road from Glasgow to Dumfries. It derives its name from being the residence of workmen employed in the lead mines, which are the most valuable of any in Scotland, and perhaps in Britain. The mines, which are farmed by a company from the Earl of Hopetoun, have produced in some years 18,000 bars, at nine stone avoirdupois the bar, in the year 1809, 25,200 bars were produced, which, at £32 per ton (the then price), amounted to £45,360; the ore dug from these mines affords a very liberal proportion of silver. Gold was found in the sand of the mountains at an early period; during the reign of James VI. of Scotland, Sir Bevis Bulmer, a German, by order of Queen Elizabeth, was sent to collect gold dust in the waters of Elvin and Glengonar, with which they were said to abound; he had a house at Wanlockhead, where he deposited the fruits of his labour. The attempt was revived by the late Lord Hopetoun, but soon discontinued, as the product was inadequate to the expense. It was at Leadhills that Allan Ramsay, the poet, was born and spent his earliest years. In the village is a good inn, 'The Hopetoun Arms.' Fairs are held on the second Friday of June and the last Friday of October.

CRAWFORD is a small village in the parish of its name, eight miles from Leadhills, situate on the main road between Glasgow and Carlisle; it contains a good inn and the parish church, which latter was enlarged and improved in 1836. The name is said to be derived from the British compound Craw-ford, signifying the 'passage' or the 'road of blood;' an appellation supposed to have been obtained from this locality having been the scene of some bloody contest between the people of the country and their Roman invaders.

CRAWFORD-JOHN is a parish in the upper part of Clydesdale, contiguous to the foregoing parish, and on the east of Muirkirk and Douglas. The small river named Duneaton Water takes its rise at the head of this district. On the top of Netherton Hill are the vestiges of an extensive encampment, and in other parts of the parish are the ruins of two ancient castles. The village, which is insignificant, is situated about a mile and a half south-west of the mail road, and about six miles north from Leadhills; with the exception of the parish church and school, it contains nothing worthy of notice.

ABINGTON is a small village of Crawford-John, from which place it is six miles distant; the only thing worthy of notice here is 'Abington House,' the residence of Sir Edward Colebrook, M.P.; there is a good inn, and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland.

LESMAHAGO,

ABBEY GREEN, KIRKFIELD-BANK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LESMAHAGO is a parish, the village called ABBEY GREEN is situated on the river Nethan, one of the tributaries of the Clyde, and in the upper ward of Lanarkshire. It is a beautiful village, in almost the centre of the parish, 38 miles W. from Edinburgh, 23 S.E. from Glasgow, and 6 S.W. from Lanark. It takes its name from the old abbey, taken down at the beginning of the present century, and an Established church was erected on its site by the heritors of the parish in 1803. The old Abbey was founded by David I. in the year 1140, and dedicated by him to St. Machute. An annual fair was formerly held on the 15th November, at Abbey Green, entitled St. Machute's fair, but this is now discontinued. The parish of Lesmahago is very extensive, being 12 miles square, and is one of the richest in minerals in Scotland—the gas coal at AUCHENHEATH, which has been worked for upwards of 100 years, is well known, and shipped in large quantities. Ironstone, limestone, and freeestone are also worked in abundance. In obtaining and working these minerals a considerable number of the inhabitants find employment: whilst many others are occupied in weaving for Glasgow manufacturers. The transit of the minerals is facilitated by means of a railway for mineral traffic only; it passes through, or near most of the mines, and joins the Caledonian line at Motherwell. The City of Glasgow Bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland, have branches here. Abbey Green village is well lighted with gas, and contains two comfortable inns, the 'Commercial' and the 'Abbey,' both of which are posting houses. Besides the parish church there is a Free church, and a Reformed Presbyterian chapel, and some well conducted schools.

The noble ruins of Craig Nethan, or Dauphane Castle, the property of Lady Lucy Elizabeth Douglas, of Douglas (Countess of Home) are well deserving the notice of the tourist. A room is still shown, where, it is said, the unfortunate Queen Mary took refuge after her escape from Lochleven Castle. There are two hiring fairs held, and two other for general business during the year. In the month of December are three market days, known as Big Wednesdays.

KIRKFIELD BANK is a village in Lesmahago parish—about five miles E. from that village, and one mile W. from Lanark, situated on the high road to Glasgow. The Clyde is crossed at this place by a fine stone bridge erected by subscription. Its people are chiefly employed in handloom weaving; in the vicinity is the far-famed cataract 'Stonebyres,' which, like Corra, consists of three leaps, altogether eighty-two feet high. At a short distance is Stonebyre House enclosed in woods, the property of Lieutenant General Sir Thomas Monteath Douglas. The original fabric of this building has been nearly all replaced by a most elegant and enlarged erection. The house is approached by a pretty stone bridge, under which flows a small rivulet, and the gardens are in the highest state of cultivation.

POST OFFICE, ABBEY GREEN, Mary Scott, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Lanark) at twelve midnight, delivered at seven morning, and are despatched thereto at ten minutes past seven evening.

MOTHERWELL,

CRAIGNEUK, CARFIN, NEWARTHILL, AND CLELAND.

MOTHERWELL is a police burgh and post town situated for the greater part in the parish of DALZIEL, and middle ward of Lanarkshire, two miles from Hamilton and eleven from Glasgow. Within the recollection of persons still living, Motherwell had no existence as a village; its name is derived from three farms, called respectively High, Low, and North Motherwell, and these doubtless received there designation from an adjoining spring called Ladywell or Motherswell. Within the last few years the progress of Motherwell has been very rapid; in 1851 it was a village of 900 inhabitants; in 1861 it numbered near 3,000; in 1865 the village was erected into a burgh under the provisions of the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, and at the present time (1866) the registrar of the parish of Dalziel estimates the population at 4,800. The burgh owes its prosperity in a great measure to the coal mines in its neighbourhood. The Glasgow Iron Company's Works, the largest in Scotland, employ about 1,000 workmen. There are four places of worship—the Parish church of Dalziel, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a Primitive Methodist chapel. There are also branches of the 'Bank of Scotland' and the 'City of Glasgow Banking Co.' The town is supplied with water from the Clyde, and the streets are lighted with gas. Motherwell is a principal station and junction on the Caledonian Railway.

CARFIN is a small village in the parish of Bothwell, one mile distant from and in the post delivery of Motherwell.

NEWARTHILL is a village also in the parish of Bothwell, post delivery of Motherwell, about two miles and a half distant. The United Presbyterians have a place of worship here.

CLELAND is a large village in the parish of SHOTTS, and postal delivery of Motherwell, from which place it is two miles distant.

RUTHERGLEN,

OR RUGLEN, as it is commonly called, is an ancient royal burgh in the parish of its name, situate on the line of the Clydesdale Junction Railway, two miles and a half south-east from Glasgow, and nine west from Hamilton. The town consists of one principal street with seven smaller ones branching from it; in its vicinity collieries are wrought, and chemical and dye works are in operation. There are a few large factories, a paper mill, tube works, and a boat building yard, which give employment to a large number of the inhabitants. The town is lighted with gas. The places of worship are an Established church, a Quoad Sacra church, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a Roman Catholic chapel—there are also several excellent schools, and an extensive circulating library. The new town hall recently erected in Main-street, at a cost of nearly seven thousand pounds, is a handsome and spacious structure, with a large square tower faced with three clocks. This fine building can be seen at a great distance, and adds very much to the appearance of the town. Rutherglen was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1126, by King David I.; by his charter, the inhabitants enjoyed many privileges. At that period, small craft came up the Clyde to Rutherglen quay. Glasgow, however, by its superior consequence, arising from its trade and manufactures, absorbed the privileges and engrossed the traffic of this burgh, and the Broomielaw has for years been the station of almost all external commerce. The Castle of Rutherglen (which stood in Castle-street, but of which not a trace now remains) underwent several sieges during the wars of King Robert, and it remained a place of strength until the battle of Langside, soon after which the Regent Murray, to revenge himself on the Hamilton family, in whose custody it then was, ordered it to be destroyed. It was in the old Church of Ruthglen that, in the year 1297, Sir John Monteith engaged to betray to the English his friend and companion, Sir William Wallace. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and fifteen councillors; a monthly court is held; it unites with Dumbarton, Kilmarnock, Port Glasgow, and Renfrew, in sending a representative to the legislature. Kilmarnock is the returning burgh. Rutherglen gives the title of earl to the Marquis of Queensbury. The fairs of this town have been noted for a great show of horses, particularly the Lanarkshire breed, esteemed the best for draught in Scotland; they are held on the first Friday after the fourth of May, first Tuesday after the fourth of June, and first Friday after the twenty-fifth of August, first Wednesday and Friday, and the Friday after the twenty-fifth of November.

POST OFFICE, 9, MAIN-STREET, Mary Hendry, Post Mistress.—Letters from Glasgow arrive, by foot post, at twenty minutes before eight morning, and ten minutes before two afternoon; and are despatched at a quarter past twelve noon, and twenty-five minutes past five evening.

STRATHAVEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF GLASSFORD AND STONEHOUSE, AND THE VILLAGES OF WEST QUARTER AND CHAPELTON.

STRATHAVEN is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of AVENDALE; 44 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 15 S. by E. from Glasgow, 28 N.E. from Ayr, 21 E. by N. from Kilmarnock, 14 W. from Lanark, and 7½ from Hamilton; situate on the river Aven. The town is of considerable antiquity—but possesses no pretensions to elegance in its dwellings, or uniformity in the arrangement of them. Like many other towns, not only in the British islands, but throughout the European continent, it seems to have been indebted for its origin to the feudal era, when every chieften had his castle or fortress for safety or aggression; the ruins of one of these frowning edifices, presenting 'shattered and haggard walls,' stand on an eminence to the south, overhanging Strathaven. The excellent breed of horses, for which Lanarkshire is so much distinguished, was introduced to this vicinity, upwards of a century ago, by a Duke of Hamilton, who brought some fine horses from Holstein, and placed them in the parks attached to the castle; from this origin, the race of draught cattle was propagated over the entire district. The offspring of the cow has also conferred distinction on this town. The herbage of the neighbourhood is supposed to be of a highly nutritious quality, and peculiarly adapted for the improvement of the flesh and milk of cattle; in consequence of this, Strav'en veal has long been held in high estimation, and a Strav'en calf is not unfrequently sold at almost as high a price as a cow reared upon some less favoured pasture. Strathaven is not a place of much trade; the most prominent branches are cheese dealing and the weaving of cotton goods; there are two or three inns, and three banking establishments. The town was erected into a burgh of barony in the year 1450, in favour of the then powerful chief, William Earl of Douglas, and is governed by a baron bailie

Besides the National church, there are three United Presbyterian Churches, and a Free church, a United Associate Synod meeting-house, and a chapel for Independents. On the south side of the river Aven, a Roman road can be distinctly traced for several miles. The market, which is held on Thursday, is well attended; fairs are held on the first Thursdays in January and March, and April for cattle and hiring servants, Thursday in Whitsun week, the last Thursday in June, the second Thursday in August, and (the old fair) on the second of November.

GLASSFORD is a parish in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, situate on the road between Kilbride and Strathaven. There are two villages in the parish named WEST QUARTER and CHAPELTON; at the former is the parish church and school, and, at the latter a Free church.

STONEHOUSE is a parish and village in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, situate on the south bank of the Aven, eight miles south-east from Hamilton; the inhabitants of the village are mostly engaged in handloom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. There are places of worship for members of the Establishment, the Free and United Presbyterian churches.

WISHAW.

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BONKLE, CAMBUSNETHAN, MORNINGSIDE, NEW MAINS, OVERTON, STANE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WISHAW is a police burgh, and an endowed parish in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, 15 miles south-east from Glasgow, and 32 miles west from Edinburgh. Wishaw formerly formed part of the parish of Cambusnethan, from which it has been disjoined as an ecclesiastical division, though it still forms part of that parish for parochial purposes. It was made a burgh under the Scotch Police Act of 1850, and is governed under that act by three magistrates and nine commissioners. The town is pleasantly situated on the face of a hill, and is formed of several spacious streets, Main-street being the principal one. The shops are well stocked, and would do credit to towns of greater pretensions. A police court is held at the Town Hall as occasion requires. The Established Church, in Main-street, is a neat building, and is ornamented by a spire and clock. There are also places of worship for the United and Reformed Presbyterians, Evangelical Unionists, Primitive Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The branch banks are the 'British Linen Company,' 'City of Glasgow,' and the 'Royal Bank of Scotland.' There are several schools and a public library. Twenty-seven years ago, previous to the opening up of the district by railways, Wishaw was a place of little importance, but since then, owing to the increased facilities offered for the despatch of the produce of this district, it has advanced with great rapidity, having tripled its population within that time. The staple trade of the district is coal, of which mineral there is upwards of one million tons sent from Wishaw annually. Among the establishments which give employment to a great number of workmen are the Wishaw Iron Works, two iron foundries, the extensive Fire Clay Works of Messrs. W. Hudspith & Co. and Mr. Archibald Russell, the Distillery of Messrs. J. M. M'Kenzie & Co. and the Railway Carriage and Waggon Works of Mr. J. Pickering. The gentlemen's seats in the neighbourhood are numerous—Wishaw Castle, the seat of Lord Belhaven; Allanton House, Lady Seton-Steuart; Coltness House, Henry Houldsworth, Esq.; and Cambusnethan House, the residence of James Sinclair-Lockhart, Esq.

CAMBUSNETHAN is a parish, the village being about a mile north from Wishaw, and contains the parish church and schools. The neighbourhood abounds in game.

BONKLE is a village, in Cambusnethan parish, situate three miles north from Wishaw. There is a United Presbyterian church.

MORNINGSIDE and NEW MAINS are villages also in Cambusnethan parish; there is a large fire-clay works in the former, and in the latter are situate the extensive works of the Coltness Iron Company.

STANE, is a village at the extreme north of the parish of Cambusnethan, bordering on Shotts. In this village are the works of the Shotts Iron Company.

LINLITHGOWSHIRE,

OR WEST LOTHIAN, is a small county, of a very irregular figure, lying on the south shore of the Frith of Forth, having Edinburghshire on the east and south-east, Lanarkshire on the south-west, and Stirlingshire on the west. The Briech and the Almond waters form the boundary line betwixt this county and that of Edinburgh, except at Mid-Calder, where the latter intrudes more than a mile into Linlithgowshire. From east to west (that is, along the shore of the Forth), the county extends sixteen miles; along its south-eastern boundary (or from Queensferry to its most eastern point), it measures about twenty: the superficial contents of the whole being about one hundred and twenty-seven square miles, or eighty-one thousand one hundred and thirteen statute acres.

EARLY HISTORY.—Much that is applicable to the antiquities of, and historical events connected with, this county, has been already sufficiently detailed in the annals of Edinburgshire and the capital—this district having formed, at an early period, a portion of the province of Lothian possessed by the Anglo-Saxons: some few particulars, more distinctly referable to this county may, however, be here added. The Gadenii tribe of British people being overrun by the Romans, the latter formed a firm but not permanent settlement in the shire; the subjugated nations of the world had snapped their fetters—they even menaced the extinction of the Roman name; the legions were recalled to avert the catastrophe, and Britain was left exposed to the devastations of her more ferocious neighbours. During the residence of the Romans in West-Lothian, which was the outermost part of their conquest in this direction, they gave a sight to the wall which they built across the island. No part of Valentia was so well protected by forts. From the station at Cramond, a Roman road proceeded westward, along the shore of the Forth to Carriden, where the wall terminated; and along the sea shore were several posts, which, according to old historians, were strengthened by towers, and stood the bulwarks of the Roman sway in this part of Britain. In modern times there have been a variety of urns, coins, and other relics of this conquering race discovered in the shire. It is understood that after the departure of the Romans, and a good deal later, this part of Lothian became occupied by the Scoto-Irish and northern adventurers, in greater numbers than in that portion now called Edinburghshire.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The aggregate surface of Linlithgowshire is neither flat nor hilly. The most remarkable protuberances form a range running obliquely across the middle of the county. The central and western parts have the most hilly ground, while on the east and south, the land is mostly level. The elevations are generally well clothed with verdure and ornamental woods; about one-third part of the whole county is either woodland or old pasture, laid down with artificial grasses; and there are more than four-fifths of the shire enclosed. Until the year 1723, there was little improvement in the agriculture of the district; soon after this period, John, Earl of Stair, introduced new and advantageous modes of husbandry, and commenced the cultivation of the cabbage, turnip, and carrot by the plough; the example of this nobleman was beneficially followed by Charles, first Earl of Hopetoun; but both dying, thirty years elapsed before agricultural spirit was again actively displayed. In more recent times, some practical farmers, possessing the advantages of skill and capital, have brought the cultivation of the shire to comparative perfection; and now this rich and lovely district participates in the general improvements of southern Caledonia. With the exception of Cairnaple, in the parish of Torphichen, which rises about fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, the mountains of this district are not of great altitude, nor are they numerous—Binny Craig and Cocklerue are the only other eminences that attract notice; they are respectively about five hundred feet high.

MINERALS AND MANUFACTURES.—Linlithgowshire contains a store of minerals of the most useful kind: coal abounds throughout, limestone is equally prevalent, in some parts ironstone is also found in profusion, and the whole surface seems to rest on a bed of sandstone of the finest quality; silver and lead mines were formerly wrought; and there is plenty of marl, potters' clay, brick clay, and red chalk. Many places present volcanic appearances, particularly at Dundas Hill, in the parish of Dalmeny, where there is a bold front of Basaltic rocks, exhibiting in some instances columns of that character. Of the MANUFACTURES of the shire, salt is the chief article; and there are considerable tanneries, breweries, distilleries, and chemical works in the principal towns. The traffic in coal employs a great number of the inhabitants. This county is rather remarkable for the state of its population, having undergone less increase in its amount within the last eighteen years than most other districts, especially those which are more favoured by being the seat of manufactures. Besides this, the circumstance of stagnation, or at least but slow progress in population, may be attributed to its scarcity of large towns, and the general dependence on agriculture under a steady mode of farming.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The only river of consequence is the Almond (or Amond); but there are a number of considerable rivulets and burns, and the Forth yields advantages which amply compensate for the deficiency of river navigation. The Almond rises in the high grounds of Lanarkshire, and pursuing a north-easterly course, falls into the sea at Cramond: at its mouth it assumes the appearance of a little loch or arm of the sea, running up the bottom of a woody ravine; but it is not navigable except for a very short distance, and that only for boats and small sloops. The main line of RAILWAY that passes through this county is the Edinburgh and Glasgow Section of the North British line. Bathgate and Uphall, are communicated with, by the Edinburgh and Bathgate Branch line; Bo'ness by the Monkland Section; Queensferry by another branch; and Whitburn by the Wilsontown Section: all from the main line.

DIVISIONS AND REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county was probably separated into a sheriffdom in the reign of David I.; it was placed by Robert, however, under the administration of a constable, and so it continued until the time of James IV. No other district appears to have been so divided into petty baronies, bailieries, regalities, and other independent jurisdictions; nor so domineered over by a number of peers inimical to peace and regardless of justice. The oldest family in the shire is that of Dundas, of Dundas, who can trace an unbroken line of descent and residence on the same spot up to the reign of William the Lion (1165), an antiquity rarely to be found surpassed, not only in Scotland, but in any other country. Linlithgowshire comprises eleven parishes and two parts of parishes, which, with two in Mid-Lothian and four in Stirlingshire, form one presbytery. It contains two royal burghs namely, Linlithgow and Queensferry; the next largest town is Bathgate. Its seaport is Bo'ness, and there are a number of thriving villages. The burghs of Linlithgow, Hamilton, Lanark, Airdrie, and Falkirk, in conjunction, send one member to the imperial parliament, and the shire at large another.

BATHGATE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF ARMADALE, TORPHICHEN, BLACKRIDGE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BATHGATE is a market town, an independen burgh of barony, and a parish; situated on the middle road betwixt Edinburgh and Glasgow, 18 miles w. from the former, 24 E. from the latter, and between five and six S. from Linlithgow. It is a station on the Bathgate Branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow and Monklands sections of the North British Railway. Another line is now completed to Airdrie. The town occupies a pleasant site, near the southern base of a great ridge of hills, extending across the county and sheltering the town on the north and east; while it has a fine southern exposure, and is seen at a considerable distance from that direction and from the west. These hills abound with limestone quarries, in which are found fine specimens of fossil remains, interesting to geologists. Bathgate lays claim to high antiquity. Malcolm IV. granted to the monks of Holyrood the church of Bathkel, with the land belonging to it; at one period the town and its adjoining lands formed part of the ample possessions of King Robert Bruce, which in 1306 he gave in dowry with his daughter to Walter, the Great Stewart—and this marriage introduced the Stuart family to the throne of Scotland. The town consists of a new and an old part, the former is tolerably well built, and most of the streets are paved: it is abundantly supplied with water of an excellent quality, the property of the burgh; and is lighted with gas, furnished by a joint-stock company. Few places of its size can shew so much bustle and tidiness, and the town is considered to be very healthy. Bathgate was made a burgh of barony by Charles II. in 1661, and was created a free and independent burgh of barony by act of parliament in 1824, and placed under the control of a provost, three bailies, twelve councillors, a treasurer, a town clerk, and a procurator fiscal. It has now adopted Provost Lindsay's Police Act, and is governed by commissioners. The sheriff holds small debts courts once a quarter. Of late years the town has acquired a very considerable increase of population, in a great measure owing to the adjacent coal and ironstone mines. The far-famed Rog head and Torbanehill gas coal is found in abundance within two miles of the town, and sells at very high prices. Young's Paraffin Light Company, Limited, have extensive works, a mile and a quarter from the town; a brewery and two iron foundries, and a glass works are in the town, and a large distillery near to it. The weaving of goods for the Glasgow manufacturers is conducted by resident agents, and employs many hands. The places of worship are a Church of the Establishment, a Free Church, an United Presbyterian, and Evangelical Union Chapels, also a Roman Catholic Chapel, all of which have a manse or residence for the minister. The burgh boasts a superior educational institution in the Bathgate Academy, endowed by the late John Newland, Esq., of Kingston, Jamaica, who was a native of this town; the munificent sum bequeathed by this gentleman, amounted, previous to the erection of this building, to between £16,000 and £17,000. The academy stands on a commanding and healthy site, in the immediate vicinity of the town, and is an elegant and extensive structure—it comprises five large classrooms, library-room, and rector's house. The courses of education are conducted on the most approved systems by a rector and other teachers. The youth of the parish have thus the benefit of a first-rate instruction in all the useful and many of the more learned branches, free of expense; while others, not parishioners, have an opportunity of participating in the same advantage by means of very moderate fees. The parish school-house, which is situated near the academy, has an handsome appearance, and is numerously attended. There are four banks here, branches, respectively—of the 'Clydesdale Banking Company,' the 'National,' the 'Royal,' and 'Union Bank of Scotland,' also a Savings' Bank in connection with the latter. The principal commercial and posting establishments are Robertson's and Stewart's Hotels, where commercial men and others will find ample accommodation; post horses, &c. are also to be had also at Denholm's and at Bowie's Inns, there are also two temperance hotels in the town. The market day is Tuesday, when a large supply of grain of all kinds is brought from the surrounding country. The buyers and sellers are now accommodated in a splendid building erected in Jarvey Street at a great expense, called the Corn Exchange. The building also contains spacious rooms for the courts and for other public meetings. The authorities of the burgh hold seven annual fairs—namely, on the third Wednesdays in April, July and August, the first Wednesdays after Whitsunday and Martinmas, and the fourth Wednesdays in June and October—all old style; the Whitsunday and Martinmas fairs are the principal, and are well attended by cattle dealers.

ARMADALE is a large and populous village in the parish of, and two miles W. from Bathgate, on the main road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It has within the last few years become one of the most flourishing villages in Scotland, being situated amongst large mineral fields, consisting of ironstone, gas coal, common coal, &c., and is well supplied with gas by a public company. The village takes its name from an estate, the property of Sir W. Honyman, whose predecessor was a senator of the College of Justice, under the title of Lord Armadale. The large paraffin oil works of Messrs. John Watson & Son, at BATHVILLE, are near to the village, also extensive collieries and fire brick works belonging to the same firm. The places of worship in the village are a Chapel of Ease to Bathgate, a Free Church, an Episcopal, and a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel. A railway passing near to the village has been in operation for about fifteen years for mineral traffic; and a passenger line is now complete from Bathgate to Airdrie, and Armadale forms one of its stations. Several hamlets have sprung up around the village. A large and commodious school has been erected by public subscription, and is conducted by an efficient teacher. There are two other schools in the village. The mining villages of DURHAMTOWN, POLKEMMET and BATHVILLE are also situated in the parish.

TORPHICHEN is a parish and village, the latter standing on the road from Bathgate to Linlithgow, 2½ miles N. by W. of Bathgate, and 4½ S.W. by S. of Linlithgow. It is a place of great antiquity, and was once a place of importance; but it has now an entirely rural character, and presents a straggling, yet pleasant appearance. Adjacent to the village on the north-east are some remains of the hospital or preceptory of Torphichen, the principal Scottish residence of the Knights of St. John, of Jerusalem; of the church of the preceptory, the chancel and the nave are entirely gone, and only the choir and the transepts now remain. The nave is traditionally reported to have been of great length; but its site is now occupied by an edifice of very different character, the plain modern Parish Church. There is also a Free Church in the village, said to be one of the first Free Churches in Scotland. In the village there are two excellent schools, the Parochial and Free Church, both conducted by efficient teachers. The parish, although in some parts rather moorish, is altogether, generally fertile—coal and ironstone are found within it, and there are also two brick and tile works, and a paper mill within its bounds.

BLACKRIDGE is a small hamlet in the parish of Torphichen, about five miles and a half from Bathgate to the west, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow road, seated in an agricultural district. A Free Church is situated in the village, and a school near to it.

BORROWSTOUNNESS,

AND THE PARISH OF CARRIDEN, WITH THE VILLAGES OF GRANGE PANS, MUIRHOUSES, BRIDGENESS, BLACKNESS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BORROWSTOUNNESS (or as it is now generally pronounced Bo'ness) is an ancient sea-port burgh of barony and parish, bounded on the north by the Frith of Forth, on the south by the parish of Linlithgow, on the east by Carriden, and on the west by the river Avon, which separates it from Stirlingshire. Its length eastward is about four miles, and its average breadth is about two. The town is 18 miles W. from Edinburgh, 9 miles W. from Queen's Ferry, 3½ N. from Linlithgow, 8 miles from Falkirk, and 5 miles E. from Grangemouth. It is situated on the south shore of the Frith of Forth, on a piece of low ground or ness, and consists principally of two streets, running eastward, terminating in one of nearly the same length, continuing the same direction, the greater portion of the houses forming which, appear to be of very old date. Between 1750 and 1780, Bo'ness was one of the most thriving towns on the east coast, and ranked as the third port in Scotland; but when the junction of the Forth and Clyde was effected by means of the great canal, Grangemouth, situated at the east end of the canal, became the chief seat of commerce, and in 1810 was erected into a separate port, with a Custom House. The trade of Bo'ness then greatly declined. It is the seat of a Custom House, whose district extends on both sides of the Forth from Cramond Water and Donibristle Point to the boundaries of the ports of Grangemouth and Alloa. The harbour is good and safe—consisting of a basin 240 feet in breadth, with two piers 566 feet each in length, and has a depth of water at spring tide of from 16 to 20 feet. Among other advantages and conveniences belonging to the harbour, that of moderate port charges and a patent slip of the best construction may be mentioned; by the latter, vessels of from three to four hundred tons burthen may be drawn out of the water, and the cradle will admit two at once. The Monkland Section of the North British Railway terminates at the harbour, and has a large traffic in passengers, minerals, and goods. Bo'ness is one of the chief places on the Forth for the manufacture of salt. Besides these works there are a distillery, an earthenware manufactory, a fire brick works, a ropery, three iron foundries, and a chemical works. And at KINNEIL, about half a mile westward, are extensive iron works, erected about twenty years ago, which affords employment to fifteen hundred persons. At these works are four blast furnaces for smelting the ore, with which, as well as that of coal, the Kinneil estate abounds; from this cause the population of the parish and the shipping has been greatly increased. In 1839, the aggregate tonnage of the port was 6,521; in 1851, the tonnage inward was 14,148; outward 97,565: total, 111,713; in 1865, the registered tonnage was 5,325; the tonnage of shipping inward, with cargo from foreign parts, was 8,093, and outward 112,111. Branches of the 'Clydesdale Bank,' and the 'Royal Bank of Scotland' are established in the town. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the burgh, the government being vested in a body of trustees. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church; also a Parochial and several other schools. Kinneil House, one of the family seats of the Duke of Hamilton, is the most remarkable building in the parish. Here the celebrated Watt realised some of his earliest improvements upon the steam engine. The barony of Kinneil is one of the most ancient possessions of the house of Hamilton. The Roman wall of Antoninus, commonly called 'Graham's Dyke,' passes through the parish; and within a short distance of the town to the south-east the traces of a Roman camp are still visible. The village of BORROWSTOUN lies about a mile inland from Bo'ness.

The parish of CARRIDEN is bounded by Bo'ness on the west, Abercorn on the east, and Linlithgow on the south; it lies on the south bank of the Forth, and is not more than two miles in length by one in breadth. The whole district is well enclosed and cultivated. This and the adjoining parish of Bo'ness were amongst the first localities in Scotland in which coal was found. At present mining operations in both coal and iron are carried on very extensively. The other branches of trade form part of what is given under Bo'ness.

Within the parish of Carriden, besides its own village, are those of GRANGE-PANS, MUIRHOUSES, BRIDGENESS, and BLACKNESS; the latter, which in former times, previous to the rise of Bo'ness, from local advantages, was a harbour of considerable importance, was also celebrated for its castle, which, during the reign of James VI., was the principal state prison in Scotland, and as such received within its gloomy walls many distinguished persons; one of the most remarkable of its prisoners was Lord Ochiltree, who, for accusing the Marquis of Hamilton of aspiring to the Scottish crown, was here confined during nearly the whole reign of Charles I.—upwards of twenty years—and was not liberated till the country fell under the dominion of Cromwell. Blackness Castle is one of the ancient fortresses, whose preservation was guaranteed by the Act of Union. The edifice was converted to the purposes of a barrack in the course of the long protracted war; it is still preserved in a sufficient degree of repair, and in charge of an inferior officer. The pier of Bridgeness affords good accommodation for vessels employed in the exportation of salt, coals, iron, and stone. At Grange-pans are the works of John Nimmo and Son, for the manufacture of paraffin and mineral oils, the only works of the kind in the district. The place of worship is the Parish church. There is a Parochial school, and one for girls, with a Subscription school, at Grange-Pans. Colonel Gardiner was born at Burnfoot in this parish.

LINLITHGOW,

MUIRAVONSIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LINLITHGOW, popularly pronounced Lithgow, is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of the shire and parish of its name, and the seat of the presbytery of Linlithgow; 16 miles W. from Edinburgh, 31 E. by N. from Glasgow, 8 E. from Falkirk, and three and a half from Bo'ness; seated on the bank of a fine lake, and on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, for which line a principal station is established here. It is chiefly formed of a single street, which runs east and west along the south edge of the water. Some of the houses in the town still possess the characteristic features of the Scotch style of architecture, but many of the older specimens have within the last few years been replaced by more substantial erections. The town, however, still possesses a variety of objects that cannot fail to interest the attentive traveller and impress the mind with an idea of its ancient grandeur. Amongst these are the magnificent ruins of its royal palace, the venerable church adjoining, and the terraced promontory on which both edifices were erected. The palace is a quadrangular building, enclosing a spacious open court, and occupies the site of a Roman castle. The castle was razed and re-erected by Edward I. of England; and of this structure there still exist three round towers on the east side of the palace, and which have been used as abutments for supporting the massive east wall of the palace. The palace was a favourite hunting seat of the Stuart dynasty; and was enlarged and enriched by nearly all of these princes. James IV. was particularly attached to his Linlithgow residence; and in the poem of 'Marmion,' Scott has vividly depicted the bustle and gaiety of the Court there. Mary Stuart, the lovely and unfortunate Queen of Scots, was born in a room on the west side of the palace on December 5th, 1542; but there are few other noteworthy events connected with it. In the centre of the palace quadrangle may be seen the shattered remains of a beautiful fountain, exquisitely and elaborately carved by Italian artists, who were brought over by one of the Stuarts. A restoration of this fountain was made by Mr. Matheson, of H. M. Board of Works; and it now adorns the west front of Holyrood House. This fountain was supplied with water from the estate of Preston, about a mile distant, and the pipes leading to it were discovered lately in digging a drain in the Carmelite Friars' lands, on the south side of the town. The church is a beautiful example of later Gothic architecture. The nave and transept are richly carved and ornamented, but the choir and apse are of a more recent and an inferior style. At the west end there is a massive square tower and belfry, which, till the beginning of the present century, was surmounted by a crown, somewhat in the style of St. Giles', Edinburgh. There is a fine peal of bells in the tower, one of them being dated as re-cast in 1468, and bearing an inscription that it had been named then, as formerly, "Meg Duncan." The Established Congregation worship in the choir, which is divided from the nave by an ornamented party wall. In the vestry are to be seen some interesting relics of the church; and in the south end of the transept (called St. Catherine's aisle) the Scotch nobles are said to have attempted, by means of a spectral apparition, to terrify James IV. from persisting in his invasion of England. Among the ancient dwellings a particular house used to be pointed out to strangers as the place from whence Hamilton of Bothwell-haugh, shot the regent Murray. The ancient Prætorium, or Town house—an elegant structure, erected in 1688, was partially destroyed by fire in 1847, but was immediately repaired; contains a council chamber and sheriff court-room, and a large hall, tastefully decorated, for public meetings. To the north of this stands the County hall, which is handsome & convenient, & contains full-length portraits of the late General Earl of Hopetoun, of his brother, Sir Alexander Hope, both distinguished officers, and of the present Earl of Rosebery. Linlithgow is one of the oldest royal burghs in Scotland. The Town Council is fifteen in number, and the magistrates elected from the council are a provost and three bailies. The burgh unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie and Falkirk, in sending one member to the imperial parliament. The county has lately erected a spacious Court House, on the south side of the street, a little to the west of the Cross Well. The building contains offices for the sheriff, sheriff's clerk, procurator fiscal, and chief constable; besides a spacious court room, small court room, witnesses and jury rooms, and a hall for the procurators of court. Immediately opposite to the town-house is a fountain, completed on the 4th of June, 1807, in imitation of the ancient Cross Well; it is of hexagonal form, ascended by steps; the water descends from the top of the fountain, which is surmounted by a unicorn holding a shield; the stream falls into a basin, from whence it is spouted into a larger one through the mouths of six grotesque figures, whence it again issues through the jaws of six other heads into a still more capacious receptacle, which is surrounded by statues in male and female ancient costumes; here all the streams are concentrated, and pass unperceived through a pillar—finding egress by another mouth in a copious gush, from which the inhabitants are supplied with water. The workmanship is inferior to the Palace Well; but as it is said to have been all hewn by a one-handed mason, visitors will be surprised at the excellence of the restoration. The whole of this architectural curiosity is surrounded by iron palisades of light and elegant workmanship. Several other fountains, of simple formation, are to be seen in the town. The Combination Poor House at St. Magdalen's, on rising ground about one mile from the town, was erected in 1854, and is a neat and commodious building, including several lunatic wards It commands a beautiful and extensive prospect. The cost of the erection was £9,000 defrayed by the following parishes in proportion, according to the number of shares which each has in the establishment. Linlithgow is the largest contributor, and others in the following order: — Borrowstounness, Bathgate, Whitburn, Carriden, Kirkliston, Muiravonside, and Abercorn. Paper-making, tanning, currying, and shoemaking may be deemed the staples of the place. In the tanning and currying branches are several large establishments, the principal of which belong to Messrs. T. Nimmo & Co. and Messrs. P. & A. M. Callender. There is also close to the town a paper mill, a distillery, and soap works. The Union canal passes close by the south side of the town: an extensive basin of excellent masonry offers commodious accommodation to vessels trading on this canal; and a beautiful aqueduct, unsurpassed in the United Kingdom, conducts its water on twelve arches, over the river Avon and a deep and extensive valley. The railway before mentioned passes along the south side of the main street. Near to the bridge, about a mile to the west, the line is carried over the Avon by means of a stupendous viaduct of nineteen arches, of substantial masonry. This structure, with the aqueduct, excites the observation of the traveller. The places of worship are the Parish church (before mentioned), a Free church, two United Presbyterian chapels, and one for Independents. There is a Burgh school, and several good educational establishments, both public and private — boarding and day; and there is a very useful Charity school, erected and endowed by the benevolence of Mrs. Douglas, sister of the late venerable and lamented Dr. Dobbie, minister of this parish. There is a weekly market for grain, held on Friday, and there are fairs on the first Friday after the second Tuesday in January; February 25th, the third Friday in April, the second Tuesday in June, August 2nd, and the first Friday in November.

MUIRAVONSIDE is a parish (in the county of Stirling) about two miles from Linlithgow (its post town) and about seven miles from Falkirk; it is situate on the left bank of the Avon, which river is here rendered of great service in propelling the works of a number of mills on its banks. The parish, which is six miles in length by two in breadth, is bounded by the parishes of Bo'ness, Linlithgow, Torphichen, Polmont, and Slamanan; the land is nearly all arable and enclosed, and beneath the surface there is abundance of coal, lime and iron—the latter is manufactured by Russell & Son, of Falkirk, whose works are called the Almond Iron Works, near to which, at Causewayend, are the works of Gardner, Morison, and Co. ironfounders.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY ON THE EDINBURGH AND GLASGOW SECTION OF THE NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY.

QUEENSFERRY, or as it sometimes called, SOUTH QUEENSBERRY (in contradistinction to North Queensferry, a harbour of Fifeshire), is a royal burgh and parish, the latter being confined within the limits of the former; 9 miles west from Edinburgh, the same distance east from Bo'ness; and 4 south-east from Ratho; a station on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Section of the North British Railway; situated between the Shore of the Frith of Forth and the ridge that rises from the coast. It is an excellent and safe harbour, and can be entered at any time according to the tide. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having received its name from the Queen of Malcolm Canmore (Margaret) who usually made choice of the ferry at this place for the passage of the Frith. Under her auspices the town increased in size, population and commerce; but in the present day it is not conspicuous for either: it has no foreign trade, and through the winter it is chiefly supported by fishing. Some little consequence belongs to it from being the ferry at Newall (a little to the eastward of the town) over the Forth; there is another pier a short distance to the westward, for the convenience of boats when they cannot make the former point: they are both handsome slips or piers, and run a considerable distance into the water, whereby boats can effect a landing of passengers at all times of the tide. At this place the Frith is contracted to a gut of two miles in width; and in the middle of the strait lies a small rocky island, called INCHGARVIE. About half a mile to the westward is Port Edgar, so named from Prince Edgar having landed there: from this place his Majesty George IV. when on a visit to Scotland, embarked on his return to England. As a royal burgh, Queensferry is governed by a provost, two bailies, and a town council; the burgh unites with Stirling, Culross, Inverkeithing and Dumfermline, in returning one member to parliament. A branch railway is being constructed from Ratho to Queensferry and is now (1866) open for passenger traffic as far as Dalmeny about a mile from the latter town. To the west of the town a new Police Office, and an Infants school are now in course of erection. The Right Hon. the Earl of Rosebery gave a piece of ground for a bleach-green to the inhabitants, and also conveyed water into the town for their use, the magistrates and council, to evince their gratitude for these favours, raised a tablet, with an appropriate inscription, over the fount. The places of worship are a Church of the Establishment, and a Chapel for United Presbyterians. A Parochial school and one for infants, with two or three Private schools, are the educational establishments. A fair is held on the second Friday in August.

DALMENY is a parish and small village in the N.E. of Linlithgowshire; the parish consists of a main body, and a detached district, the main body surrounds its post town, Queensferry, and contains some of that town's outskirts on the east and west. Its length east from east to west is five miles and a half, and breadth is three and a half miles. Nearly the whole of the parish is well cultivated and enclosed, and contains some splendid mansions, amongst which are Lord Rosebery's, Craigie Hall, Dundas Castle, &c. The village, which is about a mile from Queensferry, contains the Parish Church and Parochial School; the former is of very great antiquity, built in the mixed Greek and Gothic style of architecture, and seems to be 700 or 800 old. There are only about a dozen more houses in the village. The small hamlet of CRAIGIE is also in the parish.

POST OFFICE, SOUTH QUEENSFERRY, Elizabeth Meikle, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Edinburgh) at fifteen minutes past nine morning, fifteen minutes past one afternoon, and fifteen minutes past five evening, and are despatched thereto at forty minutes past eight morning, forty minutes twelve noon, and forty minutes past four afternoon.

UPHALL, WITH BROXBURN,

ECCLESMACHAN, DECHMONT, AND NEIGBOURHOODS.

THE parish of Uphall is bounded by Kirkliston on the north-east and east, by Mid Calder on the south, Livingstone on the west, and Linlithgow and Ecclesmachan on the north. It is intersected from west to east by the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh; and is watered by a rivulet called BROXBURN, on which and the public road stands the straggling village of that name, at the distance of ten miles from Edinburgh, and seven from Linlithgow. The western extremity of the village is crossed by the Union Canal from Edinburgh. A church of the Establishment is at Uphall, and one for a Free congregation at Broxburn. It also contains a Parochial School. In the chancel of Uphall Church are deposited the remains of the Hon. Henry Erskine, as also of the late Lord Chancellor Erskine. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland has been opened at Broxburn, and the village is now surrounded by oil works, which also extend along the railway to Uphall Station; two chemical works are also near to it. Shale, which is now so largely used in the manufacture of paraffin oil, is found in abundance in the neighbourhood, and is said to be of a very rich quality; bone manures are also manufactured in the village. Altogether Broxburn is in a very thriving and prosperous condition. The parish abounds in coal, sandstone, limestone, and ironstone. The district is chiefly of an upland character; but it is under the best process of agriculture and enclosure, and possesses some large plantations.

The small parish of ECCLESMACHAN lies south of Abercorn and east of Linlithgow, about five miles from the latter town, and a mile and a half from Uphall; it is four miles in length by only one in breadth; is watered by a tributary of the Almond, and near the church is a weak sulphurous spring, called the Bullion Well. There is a church of the Establisment and a Parochial school in the parish, which is a flat corn country, altogether under cultivation and based on freestone.

DECHMONT is a small village in the parish of LIVINGSTONE, and about a mile and a quarter west from Uphall, its post town, situate on the road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. There is a National school near to the village.

POST OFFICE, BROXBURN, George Robertson, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Edinburgh) at twenty minutes past eight morning and at twenty minutes past five evening; and are despatched thereto for all parts at half-past seven morning, and at half-past four afternoon.

Money Order Office and Savings' Bank.

Post Office, UPHALL, James White, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Broxburn) at half-past nine morning, and are despatched thereto at four afternoon.

WHITBURN,

CROFTHEAD, LONGRIDGE, BLACKBURN AND LIVINGSTONE.

WHITBURN or WHITEBURN is a parish and village, the latter 21 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 10 S. from Linlithgow, and four from Bathgate; situated on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, on which line the company have a station at EAST WHITBURN about a mile and a quarter distant. It is a regularly built little place, and is supported by the coal and iron mines with which the parish abounds, and a little weaving of cotton goods for the Glasgow houses. It contains a public library of twelve hundred volumes, and a handsome school-house, the latter built by the trustees of the late Mr. Wilson, who bequeathed a considerable part of his property for the laudable purpose of erecting and supporting charity schools in the district. Within the parish are three other villages called EAST WHITBURN, LONGRIDGE and CROFTHEAD. The two latter are populous and increasing, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed by the neighbouring coal works. The places of worship are the Established Church, a Free Church, and an United Presbyterian Chapel. The parish is watered by the Almond, the Breich, and two small rivulets. There is much moss and pasture land in the upper portion; in the lower division, on the contrary, the surface is arable, and admirably planted and enclosed.

CROFTHEAD is a populous and increasing village in the parish of, and about 4 miles south-west of Whitburn. It is surrounded by coal and iron stone mines, which is the chief employment of the inhabitants. Several paraffin oil works having sprung up around the village will give employment to many more persons. The Wilsontown Section of the North British Railway passes close to the village, and has a station here. There is a Catholic Chapel in the village, and one of Wilson's Endowed Schools, also two Colliery schools near to it.

LIVINGSTONE is a parish and village, well enclosed, and stretching from five to six miles along the north bank of the Breich water, which separates it from Edinburghshire, by a breadth of from three to four miles. The village, which is not large, is six miles from Whitburn, and four from Blackburn, situated on the banks of the Almond water, and on one of the roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow. The Parish Church is situated at the west end of the village, and the other place of worship is a Free Church, erected in 1858, with a manse. There is also in the village a Parochial School.

BLACKBURN is a small village in the parish of, and about 4 miles west of Livingstone, seated on the bank of the Almond; it contains a large cotton spinning mill belonging to Messrs. Robert Gilkison & Co., manufacturers, Glasgow—which employs a considerable number of persons of both sexes. Adjacent to the village is a lake stone quarry, said to be one of the only two in Scotland, the stone is used in the construction of ovens, being capable of bearing any amount of heat, but is useless for building purposes. There are two Subscription schools in the village.

NAIRNSHIRE.

THIS is a small maritime county in the north-eastern part of Scotland, once forming a portion of the ancient province of Moray. It is bounded on the north by the Moray Frith, on the east by the shire of Elgin (or Moray), and on the south and west by the county of Inverness. It extends from the coast, on the north, to the small lake of Lochindorb (situate at its extreme southern apex), on the south twenty miles; the breadth along the shore is twelve miles, and its sides vary from twelve to twenty-two miles asunder. The shire comprises two hundred and fifteen square miles; the number of acres in the shire is one hundred and thirty-seven thousand, five hundred.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The agricultural properties of Nairnshire assimilate so closely with those of the county of Elgin, that but brief notice of its wealth and capabilities in this respect is here necessary, Exclusive of the hilly part of the district, it may be described as a narrow border of level ground, along the shore, from one to nearly six miles in breadth—and here, for the most part, it is arable; but as the country recedes farther from the coast, it becomes bleak and hilly: there are, however, no eminences of great altitude or note in the whole county. The farms are usually small, and most frequently unenclosed. Sheep and black cattle are reared in considerable numbers, and chiefly fed on the natural pasturage. The county is crossed, in its southern or hilly part, by the river Findhorn, which runs in a direction from south-west to north-east; parallel with this rapid stream, about eight or nine miles to the west, courses the river Nairn, which also runs into the Moray Frith. Besides the rivers, there are several small brooks, the banks of which are covered with woods and plantations; and there are some elegant seats scattered over the country. RAILWAY—The only railway which passes through this county is the Inverness and Aberdeen Junction, on which line Nairn is a station.

Small as this shire is, it possesses a distinct political and judicial establishment. It comprises three complete parochial divisions, with seven parts of parishes; and contains one royal burgh, NAIRN, which is the only town. This burgh, in conjunction with Inverness, Fortrose, and Forres, sends one member to Parliament; and the County unites with Elginshire in returning another representative.

NAIRN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ARDCLACH, AULDEARN, AND THE VILLAGE OF CAWDOR.

NAIRN is a royal burgh of considerable antiquity, having been regalised by William the Lion. It is supposed that the town derives its name from the river Nearn, in Gaelic meaning alders—the river or water being understood. The original charter of the burgh is not extant. It was granted by Alexander I. in the year 1100, and was renewed by King James VI.—the gentle King Jamie—the first of the Stewarts who ascended the English throne. It is stated of this monarch that he boasted of having a town in Scotland, the burgh of Nairn, which was so long that the inhabitants of the one end could not understand the language spoken at the other end. There was truth in this, so far, at least, for, till lately, the border of the Highlands seemed to intersect the town about Rose-street, and the Highlanders naturally clung together and loved to congregate in that end of the town. But the old Gael and Gaelic, like the mists on their mountains, have gone, and the Sassenach of Nairn, like other fashionables in the south, hail from the west end. Distance by rail from Edinburgh 185; from Aberdeen, 93¼; from Perth, by the Inverness and Perth Junction Railway, 128¾; from Forres, 9½; and from Inverness, 15½ miles. There is an excellent harbour, with breakwater and pier, and a landing-stair convenient at all states of the tide. The town is composed of one main street. Approaching the town from the west, is seen the Nairn Hospital, a handsome building erected by subscription in 1846. Near the centre of High-street is a spacious structure erected about 1818, containing the town and county gaol, and a town and county court-room. For a good sea-port town Nairn enjoys certain advantages —obtained from a fertile country yielding various articles proper for exportation; and if encouragement were given to establish a ferry between Nairn and Cromarty, it would open an intercourse between the country on the northern and southern sides of the Firth. The exports consist of timber, corn, potatoes, eggs, smoked haddocks, herrings, and freestone. The imports are groceries, hardware, lime, and coal. Three branch banking establishments are settled here, and also a Savings' bank. The herring fishery and curing process is carried on successfully, and salmon fishing is also prosecuted. About four miles to the east is the celebrated 'Royal Brackla Distillery,' a very extensive establishment, long famous for the excellence of its whisky. The Highland Railway, the station for which is about a quarter of a mile from the town, facilitates intercourse with the surrounding country, and the transit of goods and produce. The freestone quarries in the neighbourhood give employment to a number of men, the value of the stones annually sent to different parts of the country from from these fine quarries being upwards of £5000. A considerable amount of business is done in the manufacture of ropes and twine, principally for the fishing stations along the coast. The burgh unites with Inverness, Fortrose, and Forres in returning one member to Parliament. A sheriff's court is held here twice weekly, and a small debt court weekly. Nairn is much resorted to in summer for bathing; its beach is inviting, its baths convenient, and in the neighbourhood is some fine scenery and many agreeable residences. The places of worship are the Parish and Free churches, and a chapel each for United Presbyterians, English and Scotch Episcopalians, Independents, and Roman Catholics. The town is well provided with institutions for instruction: in addition to the Parochial establishment, there are Free Church and Assembly schools, and an academy for the education of more advanced pupils: there is likewise an excellent Female school, well conducted and attended. Indeed, as regards good and cheap education, Nairn merits a conspicuous station; it also possesses several religious, benevolent, and literary societies, which are respectably supported. At the western extremity of the town, adjoining the Parish school, a neat monument was erected, some years since, to Mr. John Straith, who was forty years schoolmaster. Fairs, cattle, horse, and general markets—one in each of March, April, and May, on the Tuesday before the Beauly Muir of Ord market; one in each of June, July, and August, on Wednesday of the Muir of Ord market; one in each of September and October, on Friday after Muir of Ord; and on the first Friday of November. Corn markets on Thursdays weekly. Feeing markets, Thursdays preceding 26th May and 22nd November.

ARDCLACH, a Highland parish, in the south-east of Nairn. The parish is in general mountainous, covered with heath, and abounding in tracks of bleak and barren moss. It contains no village worthy of the name; till within the last few years it consisted of small crofters, with their plots of land, reclaimed from the surrounding wilds; but of late great improvements in agriculture have taken place, every year increasing the arable acreage of this parish. The river Findhorn traverses the parish, and the scenery along its banks is of the most varied and interesting description. There is a considerable quantity of timber along the banks of the river. The Parish church is nine miles from Nairn. A Free church and an Established one are the places of worship, and the schools consist of a Parish, Endowed, and two Adventure.

AULDEARN, anciently called Erin, is a parish and village—the latter a burgh of barony, is situated 2½ miles S.E. from Nairn. In the immediate neighbourhood of the village is the scene of a victory gained by the Marquis of Montrose over the forces of the covenanters. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church are the places of worship; and the schools are one Parochial and two denominational.

About five miles west of Nairn is the interesting and picturesque village of CAWDOR, where, upon the banks of the river of its name, is an excellent inn frequented by tourists and families, who visit this spot to contemplate the charming scenery around, and the towers of the ancient castle—once the proud seat of the Thanes of Cawdor. It is now occupied as a hunting lodge by the Earl of Cawdor. The stranger is granted access to the interior of this interesting structure, where are seen vaulted chambers, spiral staircases, and tapestried rooms. From the summit of the castle is commanded one of the most extensive and lovely views in this county; and many parties of the gay and the fashionable appreciate by their presence, in the summer and autumn, the various beauties of this favoured locality.

THE

THE ORKNEY ISLES,

KNOWN to the ancients by the name of Orcades, are situated in the Northern sea, separated from Caithness-shire, in Scotland, by the strait of the sea called the Pentland Frith, and lying between the parallels of 58° 44′ and 59° 25′ north latitude, and 2° 30′ west longitude; from the coast of Scotland they are distant four leagues, and from the Shetland Isles about fifteen. The whole of the Orkneys have been estimated at 150,000 square acres; of these there were, at no distant date, 90,000 in uncultivated commons, 30,000 in field pastures and meadow, 24,000 in tillage (now much greater), and 4,000 covered with fresh water. The form of the islands, from the operations of the ocean, and the rapidity of the tides, is extremely irregular; and from these circumstances the dimensions of some of them are ascertained with difficulty. They are separated from one another by portions of water denominated 'sounds,' 'friths,' or 'ferries,' some of which are only a mile broad, whilst others are more than five: though thus closely connected together, the whole of them are of considerabte extent; for, from the south-west to the north-east, the points farthest removed from each other, the distance is not less than seventy miles, and they are upwards of forty in another direction. The earliest inhabitants of these islands appear to have been Picts, a tribe originally Scandinavian, who, at an unknown period before the Christian era, established themselves in the northern and western parts of Scotland. Diodorus Siculus mentions Cape Orcas as one of the extremities of Britain; and the Orcades are first named, in the second century, by Pomponius Mela, who states their number at thirty—Pliny augments them to forty, but Ptolomy makes them only thirty; Tacitus asserts that the Orcades were discovered and subdued by Agricola, which implies that they were then inhabited. The origin of the name is undoubtedly Teutonic, and is probably derived from Orkn, a large marine animal—a term that has been applied both to whales and seals: ORKNEY, therefore, appears to mean 'the land of whales,' or of 'seals.' The Orcades seem to have been esteemed of some importance in the time of Constantine, as they are especially mentioned with Gaul and Britain as the patrimony of his youngest son. Little is known of the Orcades from that time until the convulsions in Norway, which ended in the elevation of Harold, 'the Fair-Haired,' to the undivided sovereignty of that country. About the middle of the ninth century Kenneth Macalpin obtained possession of the islands, and they continued with the Scottish throne until the end of the eleventh century, when they were assigned by King Donald Bain to the King of Norway, to whom they were subject until the middle of the thirteenth century, when they were again transferred by Magnus, King of Norway, to Alexander, King of Scotland; but, although these islands were thus ceded, the Norwegians still asserted their right to them, until the year 1470, when James III of Scotland married Margaret, daughter of the King of Denmark, with whom they again passed, in lieu of her dowry, to the crown of Scotland; and upon the birth of her son, James IV, they were finally ceded, which was afterwards confirmed when James IV of Scotland married Ann, daughter of the King of Denmark. Subsequent to this period the islands passed into the possession of the English Crown, and were bestowed by Charles I, and afterwards by Charles II, on the Morton family; in 1776 Lord Morton sold them to Sir Lawrence Dundas, and they have since remained in the family of his descendant. Having been so long and so repeatedly in the possession of the Danes and Norwegians, many names of persons as well as of places are derived from the Danish or Scandinavian language. It will be comprehended that the Orcandians bear no resemblance whatever to the Celtic Highlanders, in language, dress, appearance, or customs. The whole body of the inhabitants may be divided into three classes: the first consists of the gentry, or proprietors of land, with such as have gained a competent fortune by means of industry; the second is formed of those who are denominated tradesmen and shopkeepers; and the third comprises fishermen, and others for the most part employed in the cultivation of the soil, and are either farmers with servants, or what are termed cottars or cottagers. Orkney has given birth to some individuals who have attained to eminence in science, literature, and the arts; of these we may particularly allude to Malcolm Laing, Esq., author of a well known History of Scotland; Mrs. Brunton, authoress of 'Self-Control;' Samuel Laing, Esq., author of a Tour in Norway; his son, Samuel Laing, Esq., M.P., late Finance Minister of India; the late Dr. Baikie, the African traveller; Dr. Rae, the Arctic traveller; and also may be mentioned the grandfather of Washington Irving, the celebrated American writer, who was born in the island of Shapinshay.

SOIL, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—Compared with the sterile wilds in some of the sister islands to the north, or even with the lofty hills and bleak marshy plains to the south of them, these isles gain so much that their appearance is favourable and inviting; to the eye their surface presents a rich and pleasing variety. It is conjectured by some (and there are circumstances which strongly tend to corroborate the conjecture) that these islands were at some distant period, part of the mainland of Scotland. The hills composing the ridge that skirts the Western Ocean, as well as those that intersect the Mainland, and occupy some of the other islands, are seldom single and detached, but for the most part are formed into ridges of some extent, with small intervening valleys; and their tops instead of rising high into a conical form, are generally either flat or rounded. Some few of them are almost entirely covered with verdure; the bottoms of most of them consist of corn fields, interspersed with patches of rich old grass, affording excellent feeding for cattle; the soil is composed of sandy or clay loam: their sides produce an admirable mixture of heath and grass for sheep pasture, on a thin stratum of peat moss; while their tops are usually brown, on a bottom of peat moss, clay or gravel. There are spots on some of them delightfully romantic, where the attention is arrested and the ear pleased by the murmurs of the rills, and the eye feasted on flowers that shed their fragrance around. But what is of much more consequence, Providence, ever bountiful in adding to the comforts of man, has, with no sparing hand, spread peat moss over a considerable portion of these islands. The ancient rude modes of cultivation are now abandoned, and the implements of husbandry have been materially improved; but much of the land under tillage is not regularly fenced, nor divided into separate fields: the spirit of improvement is now, however, generally diffused throughout the islands, and regular enclosures are becoming more frequent. The grain almost exclusively cultivated in Orkney is either oats and beans, or an inferior sort of barley. The herring fishery is considerable, the principle 'stations' are Papa Stronsay, Deersound, Holm, Burray, and South Ronaldshay. The markets are Ireland, Scotland, and England; a few only being sent abroad direct from Orkney, except the produce of the early fishery, which is carried on in the neighbourhood of Stromness—and from that place the herrings are despatched direct to Hamburgh. The cod and ling fisheries are also prosecuted, by various descriptions of craft, from almost all the islands, and the quantity taken increases. CLIMATE.—Throughout the whole of the islands, rain falls in considerable quantity, especially on the western coasts: and it is supposed that the annual amount showered upon these islands averages 36·95. Snows are neither so frequent nor so heavy; but they come with comparative violence, and generally from the north-west and south-east; but though what falls in the course of a year may not be much short of the quantity in other northern latitudes, it continues only a few days at a time on the surface of the earth. A peculiarity of the climate, with respect to the season of snow and hail, merits some attention:—some part of the month of June, which in Britain is well known to be of a pleasant and genial warmth, is here not only colder than the preceding months, but almost as much so as any month in winter: for two weeks, and even sometimes more, about the middle of June, the wind blows from the north, strong and piercing, accompanied with snow and hail showers; but as soon as that period is past, the wind veers round, and warm showers succeed.

According to a survey taken by Mr. Murdo Mackenzie, in 1750, the whole number of islands under the denomination of the Orkneys amounted to sixty-seven, of which the following twenty-nine only are inhabited:—Mainland (or Pomona), Græmsay, Hoy, Waas, Ryssay, Faray, Cavay, Flotay, South Ronaldsay, Swaney, Pentland Skerry, Burray, Lambholm, Copinsay, Shapinshay, Stronsay, Papa Stronsay, Edey, Fairey, Sandey, North Ronaldsay, Westray, Papa Westray, Egilsay, Rousay, Weir, Enhallow, Gairsay, and Damsay; the remaining thirty-eight, which in the primitive language of the country are termed 'holms,' are much inferior in size, and solely appropriated to pasturage. The Orkneys comprise twenty-six parishes; the only two towns are Kirkwall, which is the capital and a royal burgh, and Stromness, a burgh of Barony. The isles of Orkney and Shetland form one sheriffdom or stewartry, under a sheriff-depute, whose authority extends over all; but he has a substitute resident in Orkney, and another in Shetland, by whom the duties are principally performed. Combined they form one county, under the title of the County of Orkney and Shetland, which returns one member to the imperial parliament. Kirkwall, the capital of the Orkneys, is a representative burgh, joining with Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty, in sending another member.

KIRKWALL, AND THE NORTH ISLES.

KIRKWALL, the capital of the Orkney Islands and of the united parishes of Kirkwall and Saint Ola, is a town of great antiquity, a royal burgh, and the seat of a synod and presbytery: 353 miles from Edinburgh by land, and 241 by steam navigation; 58 from Wick, 54 from Thurso, 41 from Huna Ferry (the most northerly part of Great Britain), and 14¾ from Stromness; situated about the centre of an island, called, by way of pre-eminence, Mainland, or Pomona, and on the South-east of the bay of Kirkwall. The town bears strong characteristics of antiquity: the principal street is exceedingly inconvenient from its narrowness, being in some places barely wide enough to afford passage for a cart; the houses are generally arranged with their ends or gables towards the street, which gives the town a singular if not an awkward appearance; many of these houses, too, both externally and internally, present striking features of old age—the doors and windows are small, the walls of great thickness, and the apartments narrow and gloomy. The modern dwellings, however, form an exception to this style, and many of them vie with the most commodious habitations of any other place of the same extent in Scotland. The town is divided into two parts, respectively termed the Old Town, and the New Town: the former bends along the bay, while the latter stretches a considerable way to the southward. A rivulet, which is crossed by a stone bridge of one arch, passes through the town. The most conspicuous building in Kirkwall is the Cathedral of Saint Magnus, which majestically lifts its head, and excites the admiration of every stranger; it was founded by Ronald, Count of Orkney, in 1138, in honour of and dedicated to his uncle, Saint Magnus, and, though the work of different ages, and brought to completion under various superintendences, must be admitted to be an edifice, not only grand and simple, but also surprisingly regular and uniform—and is certainly a most imposing ornament and object of pride to these northern islands. A short distance from the cathedral is a large and handsome church belonging to the United Presbyterians, and near it is the Free church. There is also a Congregational church. The ancient church of St. Ola, which it is believed existed prior to the foundation of that of St. Magnus, and was then the only religious establishment, stood near the shore of the road or bay of Kirkwall; around its site many of the houses are of such very antiquated appearance and construction as to allow of the conjecture that these dwellings, from their situation, originally obtained the appellation of Kirkiovog, or the 'Kirk on the bay,' subsequently corrupted (or perhaps merely altered) to Kirkwall. Opposite the cathedral, on the west side of the street, were the ruins of a fortress, called 'the King's Castle,' which time and the havoc of war had nearly levelled with the dust; it was a place of considerable strength in 1581, when, or soon after, it was occupied by the infamous Earl of Orkney, natural son of James V. The remains were cleared away during the latter part of 1865, and a new street made, called Castle street, leading to Harbour street, being a great improvement, and a better means of access to the town. To the south of the cathedral are the remains of the ancient palace of the Bishops of Orkney, and almost adjoining to these are the ruins of the Earl's Palace, built by Earl Patrick Stewart, about the beginning of the 17th century.

Kirkwall was created a royal burgh, in the first instance by James III., and its charter was renewed by James V.; its government is confided to a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and seven councillors: it is a representative burgh, and unites with Tain, Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, and Cromarty, in returning one member to Parliament. The Town Hall is a convenient building, supported on pillars, forming a piazza in front; the first storey is divided into apartments for a common prison, the second for an assembly hall and courts of justice, with a large room adjoining for the council meetings. The quarter sessions are held on the first Wednesdays in January, April, July, and October; the sheriff's court is open every Thursday during the sitting of the supreme court, and oftener when necessary. The sheriff's and commissary courts are held in Kirkwall, the synod of Orkney holds its meetings here, and the sheriff's small debts court is held weekly.

The harbour of Kirkwall, is safe and commodious; it has two excellent piers and a beautiful iron pier about 300 feet long, built on screw piles, has this year (1866) been erected, at a cost of £10,490 sterling—enabling steamers and other vessels to come to the pier head at all times of the tide; the outer bay affords good anchorage ground; altogether the situation of the place is well adapted for the resort of shipping. The town is supplied with coals principally from Newcastle. The making of kelp occupies many persons, and the trade in timber is of some consequence. There are three branch banking establishments, and two hotels. Kirkwall sustains several educational establisments, including an academy or grammar school, and others on charitable foundation or instituted by societies. The Orkney Hospital, a remedial institution, was founded by John Balfour, Esq., of Trenabie, for the relief of the sick, and as an asylum for a certain number of aged, infirm persons, and they are attended gratuitously by the faculty of Kirkwall. The Kirkwall fair at one time was famed for the extent of business and the number of merchants and others attending, from various distant places, and it has been compared to the celebrated Leipsic fair on a smaller scale. It is held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of August, and continues during that week and the one succeeding: but the business transacted is now comparatively trifling. There is also a horse and cattle market held on the first Monday in every month, at which there is a considerable amount of business transacted.

STROMNESS,

IS a burgh of barony and sea-port, 14¾ miles from Kirkwall, situated, as that town is, on the mainland (or Pomona Island) of the Orkneys, adjoining the sound of Hoy, opposite Græmsay Island. This place, which has risen within the last century, from being a fishing hamlet, composed of a few scattered huts, to a populous town, owes its increase to its admirable harbour and convenient position, by which it is rendered a place of safe resort, in these stormy seas, to vessels of all nations, trading with the north of the eastern or western hemispheres. Its harbour is, indeed a great attraction. This fine natural basin, extending from south to north more than a mile, is sheltered from the Atlantic on the west by a high ridge of moorish ground, the southern extremity of which forms the north side of Hoy Sound; while its entrance is protected partly by the green island of Græmsay, which lies midway in the sound, and partly by a ness or point of land that stretches out from the westward and covers it from the force of tide and tempest in Hoy Sound. On the east side it is defended by two small islands or holms which extend along the back of it; and even beyond these, in a sort of outer harbour or roadstead, there is excellent anchorage for shipping. It was formerly no uncommon thing in the spring months to see in these havens upwards of fifty large vessels, on their way to the whale fishery in Davis Straits and off to Greenland: they called here for the purpose of completing their complement of men, which was generally about twenty for each ship; in some years there were upwards of seven hundred men furnished from this port to Davis's Straits, besides one hundred and fifty apprentices: these are now altogether reduced to about one hundred and fifty men and boys. About five hundred men are engaged in the herring fishery, and employed by the Hudson's Bay Company, who have a resident agent. In this harbour captains may be supplied with necessaries to prosecute their voyage; and for repairs of vessels the most efficient and expeditious means are afforded by a patent slip; to Mr. Stanger the port is indebted for this important additional accommodation; the machinery of the slip is of the most substantial description, and by its mechanical power a ship of seven hundred tons can be taken into the yard. A very extensive warehouse has been erected at the north end of the town; and there is an excellent pier, with eighteen feet of water at spring tides. Boat and ship building is carried on. A branch of the 'National' and one of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland' are established here, and there are two principal inns—the Commercial Hotel is of a superior class, affording excellent accommodation. CAPTAIN R. C. TURNER, the Lessee of the above Hotel, is also curator of the O. N. H. Society's Museum, which, besides holding Hugh Miller's celebrated Asterolepis, and other specimens of great interest, has been enriched with assortments from the late Dr. BAIKIE'S Collection from Africa and elsewhere.

Stromness is a very irregular built town, the habitations have been erected without any regard to uniformity or arrangement, generally as near the sea as possible; some are even within flood mark, and protected by bulwarks, quays and jetties, which each individual appears to have constructed as suited his own convenience and taste. This range of buildings forms a narrow street, never exceeding twelve feet in width, and in many places much narrower; it runs in a zigzag direction, and is ill-paved with flagstones of unequal sizes. Stromness is an independent burgh or barony by a charter held from the crown, granted in 1817, when the government was vested in two bailies and nine councillors. The market days are first Tuesday in every month, and last Wednesday in May. There is an annual fair held on the first Tuesday in September, which continues for a week; there are also cattle markets or fairs on the last Wednesday in every month, excepting November, December and January.

POST OFFICE, Stromness, Elizabeth Sinclair, Post Mistress.—Letters from the South arrive on Monday, Wednesday and Friday during the Winter months, and daily during the Summer.

THE SHETLAND ISLES,

OR ZETLAND ISLES—a group of islands, islets, and rocks, situated in the Northern Ocean, about fifteen leagues north-east of the Orkneys, and forty-four west of Bergen, in Norway; lying between 50° 48′ 30″, and 60° 52′, north latitude, and between 1° 52′ and 1° 57′ west longtitude from London. By a statistical table of Scotland, it appears that, of the eight hundred and fifty-five square miles of land in Shetland, there were, about fifty years since, twenty-one thousand, eight hundred and eighty-eight acres cultivated, and five hundred and twenty-five thousand, three hundred and twelve acres of hills, mosses, &c, or a proportion of four acres in the hundred under tillage; the proportion of the latter has however greatly increased. There are three principal islands in the group, namely, Mainland, Yell (on the north), and (still farther north-east) Unst; on the east of Yell lies Fetlar, which is the largest of the inferior islands; the lochs of which, are famous for trout, and several of the other islands abound with seals, otters, and wild fowl. The next island in point of size is Bressay; the smaller ones are Whalray, Out Skerries, Samphray, Big Island, Mickle Roe, Papa Stour, House, Barray, Trondray, besides a great number of islets, holms, and skerries. The history of Shetland is so much involved in that of Orkney, as to render an enlarged notice of its early ages unnecessary. That the Romans visited the coasts of Shetland is highly probable, from the coins of that people which have been discovered—those of Galba, Vespasian, Trajan, and Ælius Cæsar; and the remains of a small Roman camp are to be traced on the island of Fetlar. There seems to be little doubt but these islands were first inhabited by the Norwegians, the laws having been administered by 'Udallers,' who acted as a sort of petty princes. In the year 875, Harold Harfager, or the 'Fair-haired,' subdued these islands, and gave them to Count Sigurd, who was the first Earl of Orkney, from whom sprang the true Scandinavian dynasty of the Earls of Orkney and Shetland—the latter country being at first too insignificant to be included in the title, although it was included in the grant. On the accession of the Zetland Isles to the Scottish crown, the laws of the former were gradually encroached upon by the oppressive endeavours of the Scotch earls to introduce feudal subjection and seigniorage, in place of the ancient udal tenures. From 1468, when a marriage was concerted between the Scottish monarch, James III, and the Princess of Denmark (when Orkney and Shetland were pledged to the royal husband), to the time when the two countries passed to the English crown, in the persons of Charles I and II, and afterwards to the Earl of Morton (who sold the estate to Sir Lawrence Dundas), nothing occurs relating to the possession of Shetland, distinct from that which has been already noticed in Orkney. Of its derivative we are informed that Shetland was first named Hialtlandia—and hence arose Yeltaland; another name was Hetland, signifying 'the high' or 'lofty land;' and from this word, according to the Norwegian writers, the name of 'Shetland' or 'Zetland' was obtained.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The general aspect of the country is bleak and barren; and although there is but little to attract in the form of landscape, in what may be called the interior of the islands—the whole of them being destitute of wood—yet their coast scenery presents views of a highly interesting character; and the summer tourist, who may be content to leave behind him for a while the rich luxuriance of an English landscape (to which his eye has, perhaps, been long familiarised), and take a peep at nature in her more wild and romantic guise, will find, in the diversified appearance and picturesque grandeur of the coast of Shetland, ample gratification. In the summer of 1836, a fine powerful steam-packet, which was put on the Leith, Aberdeen, Caithness, and Orkney station, made a few experimental trips once a fortnight to Shetland. A beautiful vessel now plies weekly during the summer. The want of roads has been much felt by the inhabitants of Shetland, but government are obviating this inconvenience, by constructing roads between the principal inhabited parts; and where this means of communication does not exist, boats are called into use on the numerous fine 'voes' which penetrate far into the interior: in travelling by land, the small ponies, or 'shelties' as they are called, pursue their way across the wastes without much difficulty. The cattle of Shetland are of a very diminutive breed: a cow is said to weigh from two to three hundred weight upon an average; an ox from three to four, but seldom exceeding five hundred weight. A great abundance of poultry is kept on almost every farm, and small swine are very numerous. The sheep are very small, but produce wool of an excellent quality, which is knit into stockings, gloves, and mits: the fleece, which is remarkably soft, has been wrought into stockings of a fine texture. The precarious and scanty corn harvest of Shetland is rarely finished until the end of October or even of November. The fuel in general use is peat, the cutting and drying of which occupies diligent attention. The highest land in these islands is Roeness Hill, which attains an elevation of one thousand, four hundred and forty-seven feet; the Hill of Foula is next in altitude, being about one thousand, three hundred feet above the level of the sea. The chief support of the Zetlander is dependent on the white-fishery—herring, cod, and ling abounding on these coasts; besides which, many men and boys are employed every season in the Davis's Straits whale fishery, in vessels fitted out in England and Scotland, who call here to complete their crews, and who reland them on their return from their perilous occupation. Several persons are also engaged in angling for the small fry of the coal-fish, or gadus carbonarius—known in Shetland by the name of 'sethe;' these swarm in myriads within the numerous creeks and sounds of this northern archipelago: the first appear in May, scarcely more than an inch long; about August they become abundant, measuring about eight inches in length; and in the early part of the following year they attain the ordinary size of the cod-fish: a profitable fishery then takes place, in deep tide-ways, under the term of 'sethes,' supplying the inhabitants with a portion of food and oil from the livers, for light and other purposes.

The Shetland Isles form twelve parochial divisions, composing two presbyteries and a synod. The only town in this portion of the northern group is Lerwick—besides it, there are only a few villages and hamlets on the shores. The islands now pay their proportion of the land-tax, and in every other respect have become subject to British laws; they are represented in parliament (as already noticed) in connexion with the Orkneys, to which sheriffdom they belong.

LERWICK, SCALLOWAY, &c.

LERWICK, the principal town in Shetland, is (by steam navigation) 272 miles from Edinburgh, 166 from Peterhead (Aberdeenshire), 126 from Wick, and 95 from Kirkwall; situated on the east coast of Mainland, or largest island of the group. It bears the name of the bay on whose margin it is built; and that, in its turn, derives its name from a long, narrow inlet on the opposite shore of the island of Bressay, called Lera-voe, and remarkable for its extensive deposit of clay and mud; a projecting point at the entrance to Lera-voe is called Lera-ness; and the whole bay, including the roadstead of Bressay sound, is named Lerwick, which signifies the 'bay of clay,' or 'mud'—compounded of Islandic leir, Danish leer (clay, mud), and Suio-Gothic wik, Danish vig, vig (an arm of the sea, an anchorage). The site of the town, comprising a lunated segment of the sea shore of nearly half a mile in length, and becoming gradually more elevated as it recedes from the coastline, presents the appearance of a perfect amphitheatre, and, when viewed from the opposite anchorage, the effect is singularly picturesque. The principal street extends through the whole length of the town, following the curvature of the sea shore; and numerous lanes or closes, constructed at right angles with it lead to a spacious road, or half-formed street, on the eminence above the town. The houses are built of a species of grey sandstone, which abounds in the immediate vicinity, and which is both of considerable beauty and great durability; and in general they are far superior to those of the sister town of Kirkwall, in Orkney; but here, as in Kirkwall, the houses (with the exception of those very recently erected) seem to have dropped by accident into their respective localities—their owners apparently being indifferect whether fronts or backs, gables or corners, were planted towards the street; in several places, also, the buildings project so far into the main street, that there is scarcely room for a wheel carriage to pass: it is gratifying, however, to perceive, and it is creditable to the present municipal rulers of the burgh, that all the more offensive of these obstructions are being removed. The principal public buildings are the Town-house, Fort Charlotte, the Parish and other churches, and Subscription rooms: the first of these is an old structure, containing a hall for the meeting of the commissioners of supply (also used as a masonic lodge). Fort Charlotte stands on a rocky eminence at the northern extremity of the town; its guns command the whole range of the anchorage, from the south to the north entrance of the harbour. It was originally built in the reign of Charles II.; but having been dismantled and allowed to fall into a state of dilapidation, it was rebuilt in 1781, and then received its present name in honour of the consort of George III. It is said to be of strength sufficient to protect the town against a small squadron of frigates; at present it is used as a training establishment for Her Majesty's Royal Naval Reserve. In a part of the barracks is held the sheriff court, and a part also is used as the county gaol. The Parish church stands above the town, towards its southern extremity; it is a substantial building, with a Doric front of hewn stone; but, in consequence of the flatness of its roof and the want of a spire, its external appearance is somewhat ponderous: internally, however, it is both tastefully and commodiously fitted up. The Free church, situated contiguously, is a handsome modern building, neatly fitted up. There are several other places of worship—substantial and commodious structures, of which a list with their ministers is appended. The subscription rooms, which are in the centre of the town, and occupy the site of the old church, besides various smaller apartments, contains three rooms of thirty feet by twenty, two of which are occupied as school-rooms, and the other is a public reading-room or news-room, where respectable strangers have the privilege of reading newspapers and other publications. Lerwick is a burgh of barony, having its municipal government vested in two bailies and nine councillors, with a separate board of police, all of whom are elected by the burgesses. A sheriff small debt court is held every Thursday for settling small debt cases, and a bailie court is held as occasion requires; and the justices of the peace, the commissioners of supply, and the provincial synod of Shetland also hold their meetings in Lerwick. The trade of this town is much more extensive than the amount of its population would indicate. There are shops in almost all the houses on both sides of the principal street; and the mercantile business which is transacted in some of the establishments here would be considered important in many a city in the kingdom. Almost the whole produce of Shetland, consisting of salted fish, beef, oil, butter, and hosiery, passes to market through the merchants of Lerwick; and, in like manner, by them are imported nearly all the groceries, spirits, and manufactured goods used throughout the islands. The harbour of Lerwick (or Bressay sound, as it is frequently called), is one of the most spacious, secure, and commodious havens in the British Empire; it is bounded on the east by the island of Bressay, and on the west by Mainland, having an entrance from the south, and another from the north; its extent may be inferred from the fact that, on more than one occasion, a fleet of upwards of ninety sail of war ships has anchored in it, and found ample space for getting under weigh. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland is in operation here.

SCALLOWAY is a sea-port village, in the parish of Tingwall, eight miles from Lerwick; situated on the north side of a fine bay on the west side of Mainland. Anciently this was the capital of Shetland; but in proportion as Lerwick has increased in importance, Scalloway has retrograded. Near the village are the ruins of Scallow Castle, erected in 1600 by Patrick Stewart, the tyrannical Earl of Orkney and Shetland. The inhabitants chiefly subsist by the herring fishery; and for facilitating the pursuit of this branch there is a large quay and extensive warehouses, cooperage, &c. In the spring of the year 'haaf' fishing for cod and ling is also successfully resorted to. The men of Scalloway are of a very fearless character, and frequently put to sea in such boisterous and stormy weather as would deter the most experienced and intrepid seamen of other quarters; they are also a very industrious and persevering race; some have feued ground, and have erected houses for themselves. The Parish church stands three miles from the village, at the head of a fine fresh-water loch; but to obviate partially this inconvenience the Rev. John Turnbull, the respected minister, has erected at his own expense a neat chapel of Ease in the village. On the west shore is a spring of very excellent water; the quantity discharged is constant and abundant, and is uninfluenced either by wet or dry seasons: it is covered by the sea at high water. Not far distant is 'Gallows Hill,' so called from its having formerly been the place of execution for criminals; the last who suffered on the spot are said to have been two unfortunate females, who fell a sacrifice to ignorance and superstition, in the seventeenth century, for the alleged crime of witchcraft.

PEEBLES-SHIRE,

OR TWEEDALE, a county in the southern part of Scotland, is bounded on the north and north-east by Edinburghshire, on the east and south-east by Selkirkshire, on the south by Dumfries-shire, and on the west by the county of Lanark, for almost the whole extent of its western border. In length, from its southern border to its extreme northern apex, it measures full thirty miles; from west to east, including the parts on the latter boundary that mingle with Selkirkshire, its breadth is upwards of twenty miles, whilst in the other parts it varies from ten to fifteen miles. Its form is exceedingly irregular, and the contents of its area have been variously computed. About three hundred and thirty-eight square miles, or two hundred and sixteen thousand three hundred and twenty acres, may be taken as the nearest estimate of its superficies; the government returns of 1861, state the area of square miles to be three hundred and fifty six. According to a statement made in 1821, it appears that, of three hundred and twelve square miles, there were twenty seven thousand acres in cultivation, and of hills, mosses, and moors there were one hundred and seventy-seven thousand one hundred and sixty acres.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—The shire derives its present title from the name of the county town, and Tweedale, or Tweed-dale, from being the district in which the Tweed has its source, and the vale through which it pursues its course to the east. The Gadenii tribe of Britons, who inhabited this secluded territory on the Tweed, have left innumerable traces of their residence, demonstrated in the names of places, druidic and warlike remains, and sepulchral tumuli. The Romans were the first people who broke in upon the British aborigines in the district: after the abdication of the Roman power, the Gadenii naturally associated with the kindred Britons of Strathclyde; and the descendants of those early settlers continued here throughout the Pictish period, and until the fortune of the Scottish kings prevailed in 974. From the epoch of the migration of the Strathclyde Britons, in the ninth century, the Scoto-Irish intermingled with the remaining Britons on the Upper Tweed. The next and last class of intruders on the district were the Anglo-Saxons, from Lothian, who ultimately prevailed, and finally established a permanent settlement in the shire: one of the chiefs of this people, called Eadulph, settled in the vale of Edleston water, to which, with the village, he communicated his name; in this manner those of Saxon lineage founded the families of rank in Peebles-shire. At different times the county suffered in a small degree from the inroads of maraunders from the English side of the borders, a circumstance which had the effect of keeping the people long in the exercise and possession of warlike weapons. At Philiphaugh, some of the heads of the best families fell, or were taken prisoners, fighting on the side of royalty: but in the insurrection of 1679, in the west of Scotland, which was ended by the battle of Bothwell Bridge, there were not a dozen persons natives of Tweedale. Since these stirring events, neither the county nor its inhabitants have been in any way prominent in the scenes of history.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is an uninterrupted series of hill and mountain ranges, so close upon each other that there is scarcely to be found a plain of moderate dimensions in the district, and not one of any kind unless upon the margin of the Tweed or its tributaries. Notwithstanding the attemps made by several individuals to encourage new and better modes of agriculture, it is certain that till within the last seventy years the management of arable farms was in a deplorable low condition; but, within the last fifty years, particularly, draining, ploughing, and planting have been carried on most effectually, and the general features of the country highly improved. The sides and summits of the hills are, at the present time, here and there clothed with exuberant plantations; and the great vale of the district, and its minor valleys, are now well cultivated, enclosed, and divided: rich arable fields have taken the place of unproductive swamps, and are rapidly advancing up the sides of the hills. The elevations, for so small a county, are very numerous, and some of them are of considerable altitude; the following are the most conspicuous in height above the level of the sea:—Hartfield, 2,916 feet; Broad Law, 2,850; Dollar Law, 2,840; Scrape, 2,560; Gums Cleugh, 2,200; Dundroich, Pyketstane, and Hell's Cleugh, each 2,100; Cardon, 2,000; Cairn Hill, 1,800; Broughton Heights, 1,483, and Meigle, 1,480. It appears that forty-five years ago, the amount of stock in the shire was 1,126 horses, 5,060 cattle, and 112,800 sheep: since that period the numbers have greatly increased. Little can be said of the minerals of the county. At the north-east extremity of the shire coal is found, but at too great a distance to be of advantage to the general population; the county is in the same predicament as to freestone, and the houses are nearly all built of blue whinstone. At Stobo there is a valuable quarry of blue slate; limestone and marl are plentiful; and ironstone is found in some parts of the district. Peebles-shire is almost devoid of manufactures of almost every description, except at Peebles and Innerleithen, where there are several mills for the manufacture of tweeds and shawls; it is remarkable that there is so little manufacturing industry displayed, when it is considered what a superiority the district possesses in the purity and fall of its waters, which make it altogether a most advantageous site for the establishment of paper and spinning mills, as well as general manufactories.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the Tweed, distinguished as the fourth of Scottish streams: the upper sources of this beautiful water are found in the parish of Tweedsmuir, in this county; it is enriched by many tributaries, and, after passing the ancient town of Berwick, falls into the German Ocean. The other rivers are the Lyne, the Leithen, and the Manow, all of which are subsidiary to the Tweed—and the Leggett, which runs into St. Mary's Loch, in Selkirkshire. In the rivers and small lakes there are abundance of salmon and trout, and a lake called the 'West Water Loch,' is noted for the quantity of eels with which it swarms. The railway from Peebles to Edinburgh is the North British; the one from Symington to Peebles, the Caledonian. There is also a railway to Innerleithen, and a line from thence to Galashiels. There is also a railway to Linton (properly called West Linton), to distinguish it from East Linton, in Haddingtonshire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—When the country began to be divided in sheriffdoms, about the twelfth century, Tweedale was put under the jurisdiction of two sheriffs, of whom one was settled at Traquair, the other at Peebles. Peebles-shire, from its connection with the ancient kingdom of Strathclyde, became naturally a part of the diocess of Glasgow, in which it continued till the dissolution of Episcopacy. The shire now comprises fourteen parishes, and two parts of parishes: it contains one royal burgh—Peebles, but possesses no representative burgh; the county at large, however, returns one member to the imperial parliament.

INNERLEITHEN, WALKERBURN, AND TRAQUAIR.

INNERLEITHEN (or Inverleithen), is a parish and village—the latter respectable and pleasant, is 28 miles S. from Edinburgh, 16 N.W. from Selkirk, 12 W. from Galashiels, and 6 E. from Peebles, situated near the mouth of the Leithen, within a quarter of a mile of the left bank of the Tweed, and environed on the east and west by high and partly wooded hills. Upon the banks of the Leithen are several large woollen manufactories, the powerful machinery of which is propelled by the stream, and the works employ a considerable numer of hands. Tweeds, shawls, and tartans are here made in great perfection. The celebrity and some of the prosperity of the village, are derived from the number of visitors, who resort hither to a salubrious mineral spring, possessing properties similar in effect to the waters of Harrogate, and found eminently beneficial in cases of scorfulous disorders, inflammations of the eyes, and various diseases originating in impurity of the blood. The spring is much frequented in the summer, particularly by families from Edinburgh, for whose accommodation there are a number of substantial houses, forming a neat small street along the public road, with a variety of houses behind, let as private furnished lodgings. A wellhouse was erected in 1826, containing subscription reading rooms, which are supplied with newspapers, and a select library; there is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, the Bank of Scotland, also correspondents of the British Linen Company, and a Savings' Bank. The village is well lighted with gas. Additional celebrity has been imparted to this place by Sir Walter Scott, in the publication of his novel called 'St. Ronan's Well,' of which this spot is supposed to be the scene. An excellent inn here has adopted the title of the novel. Some fifty years ago, an association was instituted, styled the 'St. Ronan's Border Club,' it was composed of a great number of gentlemen connected with all parts of the country, under whose auspices was held an annual festival for the exhibition of olympic and border games and gymnastic exercises. Though the club is now extinct, the exhibition still takes place annually, under the auspices of a committee, the day of competition being usually in August.

The places of worship are Established and Free churches—one of each, a Presbyterian Chapel, and one for Independents. There are schools in connection with the churches.

WALKERBURN a mile and a half distant, is a small village in the above parish. It contains two large woollen mills, a Subscription school, and a Sub-post office.

TRAQUAIR, is a parish on the south bank of the Tweed, and watered also by the river Quair; it lies opposite to Innerleithen, with which place a communication has been opened by means of a wooden bridge thrown across the Tweed. The general appearance of the parish is mountainous; in it are Gumscleugh and Minchmoor, lofty eminences lying on the road to Selkirk. The old mansion house of Traquair, is delightfully situated on the banks of the Tweed, where that river and the Quair unite; and on the side of the hill overlooking the lawn is the 'Bush aboon Traquair,' (the subject of the celebrated ballad), pointed out by a few birch trees, the remains of a thicket or arbour, once the seat of pastoral love. There is an Established church and a chapel for Roman Catholics.

LINTON,

NEWLANDS, NOBLEHOUSE, ROMANNO BRIDGE, CARLOPS AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LINTON, or WEST LINTON, as it is sometimes called, to distinguish it from East Linton, in Haddingtonshire, is a parish and village—the latter, which is irregularly built, and without the attraction or interest of trade or manufactures, is 16 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 14 N.W. from Peebles, and 11 N.N.E. from Biggar; situated on the conflux of the Lyne and Tweed rivers. Besides these streams, the parish is watered by the North Esk; and although the greater part of the district is hilly, yet it is fertile, and famed for its excellent sheep pasturage, and the village has long been noted for its large sheep markets in June. A church of the Establishment, one for a congregation of United Presbyterians, and one for Episcopalians, are the places of worship. Linton confers the title of baron upon the family of Traquair. A branch of the Bank of Scotland, and likewise a Savings' Bank, are established in the village, there is also a reading room and library, and several good schools.

NEWLANDS is a parish lying between Linton and Edleston, watered by the Lyne and a small tributary stream called the Tarth. The surface is diversified with hill and dale, and the hills are mostly green without heath. Trees thrive in every part of the parish, and the greater part is enclosed by hedgerows and fences. The Parish church, a small but neat edifice, is situated on the left bank of the Lyne water; and at the confluence of that stream with the Tarth stand the ruins of Drochil Castle, once a large structure, partly erected by the Regent Morton, and left unfinished when he was put to death on the scaffold by the Scottish maiden or guillotine.

NOBLEHOUSE, in Newlands parish, was formerly known by an inn in which the trustees of the turnpike roads used to assemble—these meetings being now transferred to the county hall, Peebles. The seat of ROMANNO, in the parish, was, at the end of the seventeenth century, the property and residence of Dr. Alexander Pennycuick, the author of some clever poems, and a poetical 'Description of Tweeddale,' a district of which he was a native.

CARLOPS, in Linton parish, is a small village, situate on the northern verge of the county, about three miles from Linton. It originated in the year 1784, and takes its name from some localities in the neighbourhood called 'Carlings loups,' in allusion to a witch or carling, who, it is said, 'kept the country side in fear' in those parts; and whose traditionary character, it is asserted, furnished to Ramsay the idea of 'Manse,' in his pastoral of the 'Gentle Shepherd.'

PEEBLES,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF EDLESTON, BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM, KILBUCHO, DRUMMELZIER, KIRKURD, LYNE AND MEGGET, MANOR, SKIRLING, STOBO, TWEEDSMUIR, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PEEBLES is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of its county and parish, and the seat of a presbytery; 22 miles S. from Edinburgh, the same distance W. by N. from Selkirk, 54 N.N.E. from Dumfries, and 47 E. by S. from Glasgow. It is situate in the centre of its parish, on a beautiful and large plain, having the Tweed running along its southern side, and the Peebles (or Edleston) waters along its northern limit, surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills, and its vicinage is adorned by numerous thriving plantations and elegant mansions. Among the latter, King's Meadow, Kerfield, Venlaw, and Rosetta are the most conspicuous as modern seats. Sir Adam Hay, Bart. of Haystoune and King's Meadow, who is principal proprietor of the parish, has thrown over the Tweed, in a romantic glen about a mile below the town, an elegant wire bridge, which is much admired. The name of the town has been spelt several ways, at different periods—Peblys, Peblis, and Peeblis—and the present orthography is of no older date than the last century.

For a long period Peebles has consisted of two towns, respectively called New and Old: the former occupies the ridge of a peninsula projected westward along the northern side of the Edleston before mentioned, over which is a bridge forming a communication with the old town, which lies on the face of sloping ground. The Edleston water, by a bend round the head of the peninsula, falls into the Tweed, over which there is another bridge of five arches, which has been widened and greatly improved. The town is neat and clean, and the streets and principal shops are lighted with gas by a joint-stock company. Since the opening of the railway between here and Edinburgh, and the Caledonian Company's branch from Symington, a vast number of visitors from thence and more distant places, have made this place their residence in summer, which has materially assisted to promote its prosperity; some very tasteful villas have been erected for private residence, as well as to accommodate the numerous visitors. Of the public buildings, independent of those for divine worship, the most conspicuous either in respect to magnitude or architectural prominence, are the County and Town halls, in which assemblies and other meetings are held, and the Public schools. As a town profitting by manufactures or external trade, Peebles takes a station inferior to many towns of less magnitude, and not so happily favoured by situation. Formerly the manufacture of woollens and serges was carried on to some extent, and at the beginning of the present century that of fine cotton cloths was introduced; but these branches have gone to decay. There are mills for grinding flour and meal, propelled by water from the Tweed; a brewery, a tannery, a woollen mill, and four good inns, the principal being the 'Tontine.' The Bank of Scotland, British Linen Company's Bank, and Union Bank of Scotland have each a branch here; there is also a Savings' bank. A newspaper is published here weekly, the 'Peebleshire Advertiser and County Newspaper,' which has a good circulation.

The Chambers Institution is a fine building in High street, containing a library of 13,000 volumes, a reading room, museum or gallery of art comprising many rare specimens, from the museums of the Vatican, the Louvre, the British Museum, the Royal Institution Academy, Edinburgh, the students of Mr. D. Brucciani, London, and Mr. J. Annan, Edinburgh, and other collections. Within the edifice is also a large hall, for lectures or exhibitions, and a county museum. This valuable property was presented to the burgh by Mr. William Chambers, of the eminent firm of W. and R. Chambers, whose names have been so long and honourably associated with the cheap literature of the country. A native of Peebles, Mr. Chambers has always evinced a lively interest in the well-being of the burgh; and as a lasting and substantial proof of his desire for its material and intellectual advancement, purchased the building known as 'Queensbury Lodge,' and at considerable expense, had it remodelled, so as to form the above useful and ornamental pile. In the quadrangle of the institution stands the old cross of Peebles, which was restored to the burgh by Sir Adam Hay, Bart. after a sojourn of half a century at King's Meadows.

It is not satisfactorily ascertained at what period Peebles was created a royal burgh; Alexander III. was a munificent patron of it, and its original charter is supposed to have been bestowed by that monarch; succeeding kings recognised its rights to the distinction, among whom was James the VI. whose charter granted to the burgesses an extensive range of landed property and right of common in different parts, nearly the whole of which has been lost to the inhabitants. The government is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, seven councillors, and town clerk. A sheriff court is held on Tuesday and Thursday, and a sheriff small debt court, every Friday; general meetings of the commissioners of supply, road trustees and freeholders of the shire take place here in the months of April and September, and the meetings of lieutenancy as occasion requires. A poor house has recently been erected on the Rosetta road: the situation is well chosen. The water supply to the town being rather defective, it is proposed to procure for the inhabitants a constant supply of pure water from Meldon Burn, distant about five miles. The Royal Company of Archers, or King's Body-guard for Scotland, come to Peebles from Edinburgh occasionally, attired in the ancient and elegant dress of the Bowmen of Scotland, to shoot for the old established prize of a silver arrow, given by the burgh to the most successful marksman.

The places of worship are for those of the Established church, the Free church, Episcopalians, United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics—the last named, on the Rosetta road, was erected in 1858, by the exertions of the Rev. J. Clapperton, aided by numerous friends. The Free church is a neat Gothic building; and the Episcopal chapel is finished in a superior style, and embellished with a beautiful window of stained glass. There are several friendly societies, and several excellent schools, both public and private; for the latter this town has been long and deservedly celebrated, with respect both to the method of instruction and the salubrity of their situation. The ruins of two ancient churches are still extant; one of which was dedicated to Saint Mary—the other built by Alexander III. in the middle of the thirteenth century, and dedicated to the Holy Cross and Saint Nicholas; the same monarch erected, likewise, a house contiguous, for himself, which continued a royal residence until the accession of James VI. to the throne of England. Among the objects in the town and neighbourhood which generally attract attention is Nidpath Castle, a noble ruin, looking down upon the town and the Tweed from a romantic glen, about a mile distant to the west; the building is a massive tower, and, with its interesting site and localities, is the delight of the draughtsman. This locality is much resorted to in summer for its excellent trout and salmon fishing. Half a mile to the east of the town, on a hill called 'Janet's Brae,' may be discerned the traces of two ancient British camps. The market is held on Tuesday; and the fairs on the second Tuesday in January, the first Tuesday in March (for hiring servants); the second Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday after the 18th of July (for wool); the Tuesday next before the 24th of August, the Tuesday before the 12th of September, the second Tuesday in October, and the Tuesday before the 12th of December.

EDLESTON (or Eddlestone) is a parish and village—the latter four miles north from Peebles, situated on both sides of the Edleston water, which takes its rise from various springs on the north and north east boundaries, and at Cowey's Linn forms a cascade of thirty-five feet. The South Esk has also its source out of a small lake within two miles of the village. Anciently the kirk and its small hamlet stood among the hills to the east, where some vestiges of them still survive the depreciation of time. The church of the present village is a modern building with a school attached.

BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM, and KILBUCHO are incorporated and contiguous parishes, agricultural and pastoral. The village of Broughton stands on the road from Edinburgh to Dumfries, and from Peebles to Biggar, and is remarkable for its neatness. A branch of the Caledonian Railway from Symington to Peebles, passes through the parish. There is a church of the Establishment belonging to the united parishes.

DRUMMELZIER (pronounced Drumellyer) is a parish in the south-western part of the county, lying on the east bank of the Tweed—where also stands Drummelzier Castle, formerly a seat of the once powerful family of Tweedie. It is surrounded by some beautiful grounds, and is the last of a chain of fortresses, placed on the banks of the Tweed, which are seen every two or three miles in pursuing the course of the stream. The Parish church stands on the Powsail rivulet a little way above its junction with the Tweed.

KIRKURD parish lies on the western confines of the county, and is bounded on the north by the Tarth, a tributary of the Tweed. From the first-named river the land rises in finely cultivated and enclosed grounds, and then becomes hilly, with eminences covered with thriving plantations. The ancient church of Kirkurd, belonged at an early period to the bishops of Glasgow, one of whom gave it to the hospital of Solta, the property of which charitable institution it remained, until transferred to the hospital of Trinity Church, Edinburgh.

LYNE and MEGGET are two parishes ecclesiastically united though not adjacent to each other. Lyne lies on the left bank of the stream of that name, while Megget is situated within the southern border of the county, near the head of Elbeck and Yarrow. It is a bleak, hilly and pastoral district, intersected by the small stream Meggett water, which falls into Saint Mary's Loch.

MANOR parish is bounded by Peebles on the north, and Meggett on the south, and its northern extremity abuts on the Tweed. The district is the vale of the Manor water, which rises in its southern hilly quarter and falls into the Tweed about two miles above Peebles. The parish formerly belonged to the rector of Peebles, and is supposed to derive its name from being the Manor of that churchman. Several curiosities exist in this locality—amongst these the remains of a Roman camp; a tower raised on an eminence, supposed to have been erected as a watch-tower in early troublous times, and a huge upright stone, of great age, perforated with many holes. But the greatest attraction is perhaps the cottage once inhabited by the late David Ritchie, a deformed and eccentric dwarf, from whom, it is said, Sir Walter Scott drew the fictitious character of the 'Black Dwarf,' in his novel of that name. The cottage is situated in the vale near the public road at the farm steading, called Woodhouse.

SKIRLING is a small parish and village—the latter 25 miles from Edinburgh, and 2½ N.W. from Broughton, situated on the road from the city named, to Leadhills. The parish is bounded on the north east by Kirkurd, on the east by Broughton, on the south by Kilbucho, and on the west by Biggar. It extends about four miles in length from north to south, having a general breadth of one and a half; with a hilly surface, but green and fertile, and well cultivated.

STOBO is a generally well cultivated and planted parish in the western part of the county, lying for the most part on the left bank of the Tweed, and extending about six miles in length by four in breadth. The greater part of the parish is hilly and of pastoral character; but adjacent to the Tweed and the Lyne the land is well cultivated and some of it finely planted—the latter character of improvement especially in the grounds surrounding Stobo Castle, a modern and beautiful edifice, situated a short distance from the Parish church, within view of the Tweed. Within the parish are extensive slate quarries, which however, have not been wrought for some years.

TWEEDSMUIR, about the middle of the 17th century, formed part of the parish of Drummelzier—when it was erected into a separate parish. It lies in the south-western corner of the county, with Lanarkshire on its western border. There are several ancient and rude strongholds in the parish—some of them dignified by the name of 'Castles,' but having few features of the fortress character. Within the bounds of the parish the river Tweed is augmented by the streams of the Fruid and Talla.

PERTHSHIRE.

THIS is one of the most extensive counties in Scotland, lying nearly in the centre of the kingdom, whose great northern and southern divisions it may be said in some measure to connect. It is bounded on the east by the county of Forfar; on the south-east by the counties of Kinross and Fife—from the latter county it is cut off for a considerable distance by the Frith of Tay; further on the south its boundaries are Stirlingshire and the small county of Clackmannan, which latter it embraces on two sides; on the south-west, Dumbarton touches it for a short distance; on the west it is bounded by Argyleshire; and on the north-west and north by Inverness-shire. The figure of the county is very irregular, being intruded upon by other counties in some quarters, and having many indentations and projections in other parts; but for these circumstances, its form would be nearly that of a perfect circle. From the Frith of Forth at Culross, on the extreme south, to the Forest of Athol, at the source of the Tilt, on the north, it measures sixty-eight miles; and from Meigle on the east, to Argyleshire on the west, about seventy-seven miles. The contents of the area of this county have been variously estimated; we find one authority computing its superficies at two thousand five hundred and eighty-eight square miles of land, and fifty of lakes; an another (perhaps the most correct), at two thousand eight hundred and thirty square miles of land, and thirty-three of water. About fifteen or twenty years ago, the number of acres cultivated did not exceed six hundred thousand.

EARLY HISTORY.—The monuments of antiquity which exist in Perthshire are sufficiently numerous to afford a field of curious investigation. Lying northward of the Roman wall, this shire was the theatre of the last struggle for independence which the inhabitants of the low country of Scotland made against the arms of their skilful and then invincible oppressors: the final and most distinguished battle fought by the Britons was that against Agricola, under a leader to whom the Romans have given the name of Galgacus. One of the roads formed by the invaders, passing along the district of Strathearn towards Perth, may still be traced, and also from Perth, along Strathmore, to the extremity of the county; the remains of several encampments, likewise, are at this day observable, particularly one at Ardoch, in the parish of Muthill, the largest and most conspicuous in Scotland. This shire also possesses antiquarian remains of a later age and history, in ruined towers and religious structures, the district having once been the residence of a number of powerful chiefs, and of a large body of churchmen. Before the reformation, and during the domination of episcopacy, Perthshire formed the ample diocess of a bishop whose seat was at Dunkeld, as well as another bishopric at Dumblane.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND CLIMATE.—Perthshire may be considered the Yorkshire of Scotland; like that immense county, it is sub-divided into districts, which, previous to the jurisdictions established in 1748, were stewartries under the power of different great landed proprietors; the names of these various districts (or feudalities) are Monteith, Gowrie, Perth Proper, Strathearn, Stormont, Breadalbane, Rannoch, Balquhidder, and Athol. Little attention, however, is now paid to these divisions, and the county is arranged more naturally under the two extensive denominations of Highland and Lowland, the range of Grampians forming the line of demarkation. Eighteen parishes belong to the Highland portion, while that of the Lowland comprises fifty eight. The soil of Perthshire comprehends all the varieties known in Scotland—the carse and loamy being prevalent on the banks of the rivers, and the sandy and tillable classes on the sides of the hills; in many places are extensive mosses, particularly in Monteith district. Within the last century there has been a great deal of planting in Perthshire, greatly to the amelioration of the climate and the advantage of the agriculturist. His Grace the late Duke of Athol, acted a most distinguished part in the rearing of plantations; it appears from returns published in 1830, that he planted 15,473 English acres, the number of plants amounted to the enormous number of 27,231,600, of these plantations, the principal portion, to the amount of about 8,600 acres, are of larch, about 1,000 of oak, the remainder are of Scotch fir, spruce fir, a few acres of birch &c. The same patriotic nobleman exerted himself most beneficially in the improvement of the roads of the county, which have been brought into excellent condition. During the progress of the last eighty years, a prodigious and most gratifying change has been effected in the agriculture of Perthshire, the low parts of which now vie, in rural cultivation, wealth, and beauty, with any district in Scotland; the upper portion of the county is still devoted to the pasturage of sheep and cattle, which are mostly driven southward for sale and consumption. The mountains of greatest altitude above the level of the sea, in Perthshire, are—Ben Lawers, 4,015; Ben More, 3,903; Ben Gloa, 3,724; Schiallion, 3,564; Ben Derig, 3,550; Ben Ardlanach, 3,500; Ben Ledi, 3,009; Ben Venue, 3,000; Ben Chonzie, 2,922; Farragon, 2,584; Ben Achally, 1,800; Birnam Hill (mentioned in Shakspere's play of 'Macbeth'), 1,580; Turleum, 1,400; Blair, 1,300; King's Seat, 1,196; Lochtown Hill, 1,172; Kinpurnie, 1,151; Beingloe, 1,049; Dunsinane (whereon was a stronghold of Macbeth, twelve miles from Birnam Hill), 1,024; Kinnoul, 700; and Barry, 688.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The subject of the mineralogy of Perthshire affords sufficient materials to excite and to reward the curiosity and research of the scientific student of the works of nature; but, in a commercial or economical point of view, its minerals are of no great importance. At Culross, upon the Forth, coal has been wrought for ages; but from its situation, it is of little advantage to this county. Limestone rocks are found in a variety of localities, both in the high and the low country; but the use of lime is greatly impeded from the want of proper fuel for burning it—peat, which is the fuel of all the inland districts, being a weak and ineffectual agent in the process of calcination. Marble, of a superior quality, is worked near Glentilt; beds of fire-clay have been discovered near Culross; and in that neighbourhood, on the Devon, there is abundance of ironstone. About Callander that species of rock called breccia, or, more familiarly, 'plum pudding stone,' is not uncommon; and here also, as in other parts, are various kinds of slate. A chain of sandstone runs from Gartree to the vicinity of Crieff; upon the Tay is one of the most celebrated stone quarries in this country; the principal stone of which the Grampians consist is granite. Perthshire abounds with game of nearly every description, though the large species is now considerably diminished in numbers: the red deer, or stag may be said to inhabit the forests and mountain glades in the most perfect state of nature and wildness; it is cautious in the extreme, and singularly jealous of the human form, eluding with wonderful effect the wiles of the sportsman. During the sojourn of Her Majesty and the late Prince Consort with the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Prince enjoyed the sport of deer stalking with all the excitement of a sportsman. A variety of other game are also inhabitants of these wilds; among the rest, the roe, a much more familiar animal than the stag—appearing, even in the summer, in the woodlands and plantations of the valleys, down to the habitable places. In regard to its natural features, Perth is esteemed a county of first-rate interest. From its inland situation, Perthshire of course does not comprise any combination of marine and mountain scenery, which form the great attraction of the West Highlands; yet, as it abounds in inland lakes, and possesses rising grounds of as grand a character as that district, it is in no respect inferior as the object of 'a tour in search of the picturesque and beautiful,' while its charming plains may be said to form an additional attraction. The principal pursuit of industry, in the towns and villages of Perthshire, is the weaving of linen goods, chiefly of coarse fabrics; in connection with this branch of manufacture, flax spinning mills and a considerable number of bleach fields are established. The manufactures of the county are not, however, wholly confined to that of linen: ginghams and pullicates are produced at Perth, and cotton spinning works are in constant operation at Stanley (in Auchtergaven) and Doune; the woollen manufacture is carried on to a limited extent, in two or three places in the shire; and considerable distilleries and breweries are found in several towns and villages. It may be remarked that the whole of this large and populous county exhibits in almost every portion, manifestations of being in a thriving and prosperous condition, and affords a strong example of what has been effected during the last century and a half, in the civilization of the country, in the exchange of a life of almost savage strife, ignorance, and poverty, for one of intelligence, peace, and all the comforts to be procured by industry.

Rivers, Lakes, and Railways.—Like all elevated countries, Perthshire abounds with extensive lakes and rivers, which occupy valleys lying between lofty mountains. The chief running waters are the Tay, the Earn, the Garry, the Bran, the Almond, the Teath, the Allan, the Dochart, the Tummell, the Bruar, the Ericht, the Ardle, the Shee, and the Isla—besides innumerable third and fourth rate rivers and streamlets of all sizes. The Forth, from rising in Stirlingshire, is not considered a Perthshire river, though it flows along a large portion of its south-west quarter. The chief lakes of the county are Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Ard, Loch Voil, Loch Lubnaig, Loch Dochart, and Loch Earn—those are in the south-west part of the shire; Loch Tay, in the centre of the mountainous district; and Loch Rannoch, Loch Ericht, and Loch Lydoch, (the two latter in part only), in the north-west quarter; in the lower divisions there are some smaller and less important lakes. The most remarkable mineral waters as yet discovered in this county are those of Pitcaithly, near the bridge of Earn, which have been long famed for their efficacy in curing scrofula, and likewise complaints of the stomach. There are several lines of railway passing through the shire; the Scottish Central Section of the 'Caledonian Line,' the 'Scottish North Eastern,' the 'Highland Line,' the 'Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee Section of the North British Line,' the 'Dundee, Perth, and Aberdeen,' the 'Dundee and Newtyle,' the 'Coupar-Angus and Blairgowrie,' the 'Perth, Almond Valley, and Methven,' the 'Crieff and Methven Junction,' and the 'Forth and Clyde.'

Divisions, Representation, &c.—Perthshire comprehends seventy-two entire parishes and twelve parts of parishes. The county is divided into ten districts, each under the jurisdiction of a justice of peace court, and a body of deputy lieutenants; it is further divided into two sheriff-substituteries—the seat of the one being Perth, the other Dunblane. The shire contains only two royal burghs, Perth and Culross: the former returns one member to parliament, and the latter is a contributory burgh, joining with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline, in sending another. The shire, in common with other Scottish counties, likewise has one representative in the senate.

ABERNETHY AND ABERARGIE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ARNGASK, DRON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ABERNETHY is a parish lying partly in the county of Fife and partly in Perthshire—the village, said to have been the capital of the Pictish kingdom, in Scotland, is scattered over a considerable space of ground, 8 miles S.E. from Perth, and 14 N.W. from Cupar, in Fife; about half a mile north of the river Earn, near to its junction with the Tay. It is seated to the south of a spacious and rich agricultural dale, bounded by lofty hills, which are chiefly planted with timber. Some of the houses are tolerably well built, but the only structure deserving particular notice is a circular tower, the only one of its kind (with the exception of that at Brechin), in Scotland. It stands in an angle of the burial ground of the Established Church, and is about seventy-five feet high, and twenty-four feet in diameter at its base. It is composed of sixty-four courses of regularly hewn stone, and contains one bell and the parish clock. The date of its erection is unknown, but tradition ascribes its origin to the Picts, who are said to have built it in one night, and that the stones of which it is constructed were removed from the distance of twelvemiles, by a formed line—one man passing them on to another until the whole work was completed. Abernethy is a burgh of barony, and its inhabitants are for the most part employed in weaving. The parish of Abernethy is bounded by the river Earn on the north, on the east by Newburgh and Abdie, and on the south by Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo; it is between five and six miles both in breadth and length, and besides the village of its name already described, contains the small one of ABERARGIE, situated about a mile to the west. A fair is held on the fourth Wednesday in May.

DRON, a parish in the south-western extremity of Perthshire, extending into the beautiful district of Strathearn, is divided from Abernethy, on the east by the rivulet Farg. Although in some parts the surface is broken and irregular, in the lower parts the land is flat and fertile, being a portion of the rich carse of the Earn. The church, a handsome Gothic edifice, is a fine object on the rising ground to the left, on approaching the Bridge of Earn from the south.

ARNGASK is a parish lying between Abernethy and Forgandenny, and partly in the counties of Perth, Fife and Kinross. The country here is hilly, and more pastoral than arable.

Is a manufacturing town, and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, which latter is mostly in this county, and extends into that of Forfar, 62 miles N. from Edinburgh, 20 N. from Perth, 17 N. by W. from Dundee, 12 W. from Forfar, 5 from Blairgowrie, and 4 from Meigle pleasantly situated at the base of a range of hills, on the small river Alyth, and is a station on the Meigle and Alyth branch of the Scottish North Eastern line. The manufacture of brown linens is carried on here to a considerable extent, and there is a mill for the manufacture of woollens. It was erected into a burgh of barony by James III; and a baron bailie court is held on the first Tuesday in every month. The parish is divided into two considerable districts by the hills of Alyth Loyal and Barry. Mount Blair, a conspicuous point of land, rises about twelve hundred feet above the level of the sea. The parish is watered by the river Isla, and several smaller streams. The southern district, lying in the strath, is about four miles long and three broad, this, as well as the tract of land towards the hills, is fertile and verdant. The places of worship are the Parish church (which has a lofty spire) a Free church, and United Presbyterian and Episcopalian chapels. The markets are held on the following days: on the third Tuesday in May, cattle, sheep, and hiring; the second Tuesday in June (old style), cattle and sheep; the first Tuesday in August, cattle and sheep; the first Tuesday and Wednesday in November, cattle, sheep, and hiring; the second Tuesday after the 11th November (old style), cattle and sheep; and a monthly market during the Winter, on the fourth Monday in the month.

AUCHTERARDER,

ABERUTHVEN, BLACKFORD, TRINITY GASK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

AUCHTERARDER is a parish, and seat of a presbytery—the village, a considerable one, and of some consequence in manufactures, is 20 miles from Stirling and 14 from Perth; situated on the high road between the latter city and Doune, on the south side of the river Earn (whose stream is famed for trout and salmon), and it is a station on the Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian Railway. The village, which at one period enjoyed the distinction of a royal burgh, consists of one large street, which extends nearly a mile in length, and is famous as the place where originated the disruption in the Church of Scotland, with the late Rev. Robert Young. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in weaving. There are two dye works and a chemical works in the village. A new combination Poorhouse has recently been erected near to Auchterarder for the accommodation of this and ten adjoining parishes. The places of worship are, the Established, the Free, two United Presbyterian churches, and an Evangelical Union chapel: the village also contains several good schools and a public library. The ruins of Kincardine Castle, the ancient seat of the Montrose family, are in the neighbourhood, and in the occupation of Mrs. Grove. The road to the Castle, from Auchterarder, passes between the bellows and the forge of an ingenious blacksmith named Hally. The market is held on Saturday. Fairs on the first Tuesday in February, the last Tuesday in March, the first Thursday after the first Tuesday in May, the Friday before the Falkirk Michaelmas tryst, and the largest, on the sixth of December.

ABERUTHVEN is a small village, situated two miles north from Auchterarder, on the road to Perth. The village contains a Free church, and the ruins of an old church, part of which has been converted into a vault for the family of James Duncan, Esq., of Damside, and the Graeme family, of Inchbrakie; and a short distance hence is a mausoleum belonging to the noble family of Montrose.

BLACKFORD is a parish and village, the latter being situated three miles and a half west of Auchterarder, on the road from Doune to Perth, at the extremity of the Ochil Hills. The parish is watered by the Allan, from the north of which river the ground rises and forms a group of sandy hills, with a number of vast hollows, some of them round, and others extending in length, forming little valleys, through which, for the most part, run small brooks. The village is of considerable size and importance, containing several extensive tanneries and breweries, one of the latter having been in existence since 1830, and the ales known as Sharp's Original Blackford Ales. The other trades are building, shoe manufacturing, and others usually found in villages. There is a branch of the Central Bank of Scotland, an Established and a Free church, with schools in connection. The Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian line passes through the village and has a station here.

TRINITY GASK is a parish about five miles north of Auchterarder. The parish contains an Established church, an United Presbyterian church, and a Parochial school. Adjoining Orchard Farm are the ruins of Gasken Hall, the scene of Wallace's interview with Fawdon's Ghost.

AUCHTERGAVEN AND STANLEY.

AUCHTERGAVEN (or Auchtergovan), is a village and parish, about nine miles from Perth, situated on the road from Perth to Dunkeld. The district, which is hilly and moorish, lies on the south-west bank of the Tay, and on the south-east side of Bernam Hill. The manor and ancient parish of LOGIEBRIDE is now a component part of this parish. A Church of the Establishment, a Free Church, an United Presbyterian Chapel, and a Parochial School are in the parish. The thriving hamlet of STANLEY, partly in the parish of Auchtergaven and partly in that of Redgorton, is situated nearly four miles from Auchtergaven, and seven from Perth. There is an extensive cotton spinning and manufacturing establishment in this village. A Free Church, with a school in connection, is in the hamlet, also a Parochial School. A branch from the Scottish Central Railway comes to the village. A fair for cattle is held in Auchtergaven, on the second Friday in November.

BLAIR-ATHOLE AND BRIDGE OF TILT.

BLAIR-ATHOLE is a small village and parish, included in the district of Athol or Athole. The word Athole signifies pleasant land, and Blair of Athole, the name of its principal valley, means the field or vale of Athole. The district is forty-five miles in length, and 30 in breadth, and the parish is 24 miles from N.E. to S.W., and 20 from N. to S. It lies on the north-west Highlands of Perthshire, bounded on the south by Fortingall, Fosse and Moulin, and on the north by Inverness and Aberdeenshire, and contains a large tract of Highland territory, the mountains of which are almost entirely covered with large end beautiful woods, interspersed with fertile vales (which are in a high state of cultivation), lakes and rivers, the principal of which are, Loch Garry and Loch Loch, the Tummel, Tilt and Garry, all abounding with a variety of fish. The village is situated on the north side of Garry, 20 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, on the Inverness road, and is a station on the Highland Railway. Within a short distance of the village is the noble old Castle of Blair, now called Athole House, the ancient family residence of the Dukes of Athole. The mansion is a long narrow building, three stories high (formerly much higher), and a place of considerable strength, but reduced in height by the attacks of the Highlanders in 1716. Blair Athole is celebrated for its noble old woods and waterfalls; three miles to the west of the village are those of Bruar, whose stream makes several distinct falls, rushing through a rough perpendicular channel, the banks of which are covered with fine firs planted by the late Duke, in compliance with the request of Burns in his well-known petition. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland is in operation; and in the village is also an excellent hotel (the Blair Athole), of which Mr. Mac. Farlane is the proprietor.

In the parish of Athole is the beautiful little village of the BRIDGE OF TILT, separated only from Blair Athole by the water of Tilt, which is crossed by a neat bridge, that gives a prefix to the name of the place. It consists of a few neat cottages, and the Bridge of Tilt Private Hotel (Mr. Mac. Farlane's), and its pretty rural aspect is embellished by the beautiful residence and grounds of J. P. M'Inroy, Esq. The scenery around, too, is very charming, and includes Glen Tilt, the Falls of Fender, &c., all combining to interest the tourist. The principal heritor of the parish is the Duke of Athole.

POST OFFICE, BLAIR-ATHOLE, Archibald Stewart, Post Master.—Letters from the South arrive at forty-three minutes past ten morning, and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes past two afternoon, and at twenty minutes past five evening.

Letters from the North arrive at twenty minutes past two afternoon, and are despatched thereto at forty-three minutes past eleven morning.

BLAIRGOWRIE,

RATTRAY AND NEW RATTRAY, CLUNIE, BENDOCHY, LETHENDY, AND KINLOCH.

BLAIRGOWRIE is a parish containing the thriving little town of its name—the latter 12 miles E. from Dunkeld, 5 W. from Alyth, and the same distance north from Coupar Angus; beautifully situated on the southern slope of the range of hills which bound the valley of Strathmore on the north, and at the mouth of the pass through which the great north road to Fort George (by the Spittal of Glenshee and the Castletown of Braemar) runs; the river Ericht passes close to the town, and propels the machinery of numerous flax spinning mills on a large scale on both sides of the river; and there are several linen manufactories. A branch of the Scottish North-Eastern Railway from Coupar Angus was opened in 1855, and by its means there is communication with most parts of the United Kingdom. Blairgowrie was created a burgh of barony in the year 1634, by a charter from Charles I., and is now governed by a baron bailie and four councillors. A sheriff's small debt court is held for the disposal of cases not exceeding £8 6s. 8d., four times a year; the magistrates hold a monthly court, settling claims under £5; and a police court sits daily. There are three branch banking establishments, a savings' bank, and clubs for the votaries of angling, curling, and quoiting. A church was erected in 1824, upon an elevated site, since when a handsome Free church has been built, and in 1858 another Free church was erected in Rory-street; there are also places of worship for Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. Schools are connected with most of the places of worship. Blairgowrie parish is of an irregular form, about eleven miles in length and three in breadth. It is divided into two districts by the Grampians, which rise immediately north of the village; the lower district is highly cultivated and fertile, while the upper is comparatively barren and moorish, with the exception of the banks of the river, which are good alluvial soil The scenery in the neighbourhood of the town is very beautiful; and in the adjoining parish, about Craighall (the seat of Robert Clerk Rattray, Esq.), it is of the most romantic character, and is scarcely surpassed in any part of Scotland; the proprietor kindly permits strangers visiting the place to walk through the entire grounds. To lovers of the 'gentle art' of angling, no locality could be more suitable for enjoying this healthful and delightful amusement—there being not only excellent trout and salmon fishing in the Ericht and the Tay, the Isla and the burns of Lunan and Lornty (which are all within a moderate distance of the town), but likewise capital perch and pike fishing in the several lochs in the neighbourhood; there are six of these beautiful lakes not more than four miles from Blairgowrie, all abounding with the two latter species of fish. On account of the inviting attractions around, the salubrity of the air, and the numerous lovely walks in the environs, the town is much frequented in summer by families from more crowded places, who are happy to exchange the confined atmosphere which they usually inhale for the fresh invigorating breezes and rural perambulations of the country. Amongst the antiquities of the vicinity, the remains of the Castle of Glasclune must be noticed; they present a strikingly picturesque ruin, situated on the precipitous bank of a narrow wooded glen, about two miles from the village. Fairs are held at Blairgowrie on the third Wednesday in March, on the 26th of May (if it falls on Wednesday—if not, on the first Wednesday after), the 23rd of July, the first Wednesday of November, the 22nd of November, (or the first Tuesday after), and the Wednesday before Falkirk tryst; a market for cattle and grain is also held every fortnight, on Tuesdays, which is well attended. The annual Martinmas market, for hiring and cattle, is held on the 23rd of November, except when the 23rd falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or Monday.

RATTRAY is a parish adjoining Blairgowrie, comprising the villages of OLD and NEW RATTRAY. The former pleasant, but irregular in its buildings, is situated about three-quarters of a mile east from Blairgowrie. New Rattray is of modern erection, and is connected with Blairgowrie by a bridge of four arches crossing the Ericht. The parish extends four miles in length by two in breadth. The surface is much diversified, the land on the banks of the river being arable and fertile, while the higher grounds are only suitable for pasture. On the banks of the river are a number of flax spinning mills, which afford employment to a large number of the inhabitants. To the south-east, on a rising ground called the Castle-hill, remain the vestiges of the ancient Castle of Rattray; and about two miles north of the village stands Craig Hall, on a rock that rises one hundred feet perpendicularly. The places of worship are a handsome church built in 1820, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. Fairs are held on the first Friday in April and August.

CLUNIE parish lies about five miles west of Blairgowrie; it includes part of the lower range of the Grampians, which are barren and covered with heather. The scenery, however, on the whole, is romantic and pleasing, presenting abundance of wood and water. The loch of Clunie is one of the most beautiful small sheets of water in the country; within it is a small island (thought to be artificial), on which stands an ancient tower, the property of the Airly family, which is supposed to have been the birth place of the 'Admirable Crichton,' whose father, Sir Robert Crichton, Lord Advocate of Scotland, was then proprietor of the barony of Clunie. The tower is still in good repair, and partly furnished, though rarely occupied, but it is open to strangers desirous of visiting it. On the northern side of the lake lies the charming property of Forneth, belonging to Mr. Spied.

BENDOCHY is a parish in Strathmore, a few miles east of Coupar Angus, bounded on the east by the river Isla, and is divided in two parts by the river Ericht It is twelve miles in length, and from six to eight in breadth. There are seven small lakes in the parish.

LETHENDY, a small parish bounded by Caputh on the south, Clunie on the west, and Blairgowrie on the east, is about three miles in length, by one in breadth. The land is arable.

KINLOCH is a parish, bounded by Clunie on the south, Blairgowrie on the east, and Bendochy on the north, extending about seven miles in length, by an average breadth of one and a half. There are three lakes in the southern division, namely, Fenzies Loch, Rae Loch, and Drumelie Loch. The Parish church is situated on the public road, on the south-east verge of the district.

POST OFFICE, High-street, Helen Ayson, Post Mistress—Letters from all parts (except those by rural messengers) arrive at five minutes past one and ten morning, and are despatched at ten minutes past twelve noon, and half-past five evening.

Letters arrive from Dundee and the North at fifty minutes past five evening, and are despatched at ten night.

Letters arrive (by rural messengers) from Rattray, at seven and ten morning, and five evening; and are despatched at fifteen minutes past seven, and fifty minutes past ten morning.

Letters arrive from Forneth at five evening, and are despatched at seven morning.

CALLANDER.

ABERFOYLE, BALQUHIDDER, BRIDGE OF TURK, LOCHEARN HEAD, PORT OF MENTEITH, RUSKIE, STRATHYRE, GARTMORE, TROSSACHS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CALLANDER is a modern and neat village and parish, and a burgh by the adoption of Police (Scotland) Act, 1862; 52 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 S.W. from Perth, 35 N. from Glasgow, 16 N.W. from Stirling, 8 N.W. from Doune, and 6 N. from Thornhill; situated in a beautiful valley on both sides of the Teith, which river is here crossed by a bridge of three arches; and the houses are disposed in regular plan, and covered with blue slates. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church, both of which are handsome modern buildings, with good schools in connection; there is also a small Episcopal chapel, only open for divine service during the summer season. The Dunblane, Doune, and Callander Railway terminates here; this line has been the means of bringing thousands of visitors and tourists during the summer, to enjoy the beautiful scenery of Callander and neighbourhood; and many first class villas and cottages have been erected and fitted up for their accommodation; the two first-class hotels—the Dreadnought, and the M'Gregor's, also afford excellent accommodation to a large number. An extension of the above railway, through the Highlands, to Oban, is (1866) shortly expected. The scenery around Callander is uncommonly beautiful: immediately above the village is a peculiarly lovely spot, formed by the junction of two little rivers, issuing respectively from Loch Lubnaig and Loch Vennacher, which when united form the Teith. Callander may be reckoned the threshold of the Highlands in this quarter. A mile west of the village is the pass of Leny, which affords access to a delightful range of mountain prospect; the bridge of Bracklyn is another fine point in the scenery directly surrounding Callander; and the ride to Loch Katrine and the Trossachs (classic scenes), about ten miles from the village, is extremely fine. The parish extends from the banks of the Teith to the Grampians; and, before a portion of it was taken by Trossachs Parish, was sixteen miles in length, by a breadth of ten. The low grounds are arable and fertile, but the upper country is wild and heathy. Callander has four annual fairs, namely, the 21st of March, first Tuesday in May (old style), first Thursday in December (old style), and the third Tuesday in July.

ABERFOYLE, a parish (and the name of a celebrated pass or long valley between the Highlands and Lowlands), is remarkable for its picturesque scenery, its fine lakes and numerous streams, and the marked direction taken by the Grampians through the lower part of it; as well as for producing a great quantity of rare plants, suited to reward the researches of the botanist. The village or 'clachan' of Aberfoyle is the scene of some fictions in the novel of 'Rob Roy.' At the head of the valley or pass lies Loch Ard, a bright and placid basin, embedded in surrounding woods, over which rises the gracefully towering form of Ben Lomond one of whose summit platforms ascends upwards of three thousand feet above the level of the sea. The best view of this noble eminence is obtained from a wooded promonotory which juts out into the water (scarcely leaving room for the road that passes on, to the westward), and which, it is said, was the spot on which the skirmish occurred, described in the above novel, where Ellen Macgregor makes her first appearance. Fairs are held within the parish on the first Friday in August, and the third Thursday in October.

BALQUHIDDER is a Highland parish, lying in the western extremity of the county, among the Grampians. The village is situated at the east end of Loch Voil, at the distance of thirteen miles from Callander, and is remarkable as the last residence of the famous Rob Roy, before mentioned, whose grave is pointed out in the churchyard. The parish is altogether mountainous and pastoral, and, from the number of acclivities composing its sides, has obtained the popular appellation of the 'Braes of Balquhidder,' by which it is celebrated in Scottish song and legend. It comprises several lofty mountains, among which Ben More rises in majestic superiority, and likewise possesses many beautiful lakes, including Loch Doine, Loch Voil, part of Loch Lubnaig, and part of Loch Earn, with several others of minor celebrity.

STRATHYRE is a small village in this parish, it is eight miles from Callander, on the coach route for Killin, &c.

LOCH-EARN HEAD is a beautiful little village in the parish of Balquhidder, situated at the head of Loch Earn, from which it derives its name. The Loch is an elongated sheet of water, seven miles in length, one in breadth, and said to be one hundred fathoms deep; it is at the foot of Glen Ogle, a wild pass or outlet from the Breadalbane country and the North Western Highlands, through which narrow gloomy defile Her Majesty drove on her first visit to Scotland in 1842; the village being in the above parish, 'Rob Roy's country,' and at a junction of the roads leading to Callander, Crieff, and Killin, it has been the scene of many a wild raid by the above famous freebooter. The beautiful situation and quiet character of the place, with the many objects of interest, and the fine scenery, attracts many visitors, tourists, and private families during the summer months. The views from the oriel windows of Mr Dayton's magnificent hotel command the fine scenery of the lake, the upper part of Strathearn and the mountains; one of the latter (Benvoirlich) rises from the shore to a height of 3,300 feet. In the village is a Free church and two good schools.

PORT OF MENTEITH (or Monteith), is a parish in the ancient district of Monteath, fifteen miles from Stirling. The chief object of attraction in the parish is the Loch or Lake of Menteith, a beautiful sheet of water near the centre of the district, adjoining the church and manse. It is about five miles in circumference, and is adorned by the small island of INCHMAHOLM, where stand the fine remains of a priory or monastery founded in 1238. The ruins of the church and cloisters are very extensive, and exhibit many fine specimens of fine old architecture of a massive nature. The arch way entrance is very elegant. The dormitory and vaults have been for many ages the place of sepulture of many noble and ancient families. The ruins of these interesting buildings are sequestered in overhanging woods of considerable age and growth; some of the trees are said to be upwards of three centuries old. In this vicinity on a gentle eminence, are seen the remains of what is still known as Queen Mary's Bower, where, after the disastrous battle of Pinkie, the young Princess found a safe asylum till her departure for France. The box-wood bower with its large hawthorn in the centre, where the youthful princess passed some of her happiest days, is still an object of interest to all who visit the island. In a smaller islet, a short distance from Inchmaholm, stand the ruins of the principal residence of the Earls of Menteith. The Menteith Hotel adjoins the Loch, and is capable of affording excellent accommodation to visitors who wish to enjoy the beautiful scenery of the district. The village of GARTMORE and the small hamlets of RUSKIE and HAMMERSMITH are in this parish.

TROSSACHS has recently been created a parish, about thirteen miles being taken from the parish of Callander, and portions of the parishes of Aberfoyle and Port of Menteith. It is about thirteen miles in length, and seven in breadth, and is very mountainous. The church and manse are about a mile and a half from Loch Katrine and eight miles from Callander. A short distance from the church is the Trossach's Hotel, an establishment well known to visitors and tourists, who come from all parts of the kingdom to enjoy the splendid scenery in the neighbourhood of the Trossachs, Loch Katrine, Loch Vennacher, &c.

The BRIDGE of TURK, is a small hamlet in this parish, and contains a school, and the ruins of a very large and handsome hotel, which was unfortunately burned down a short time ago.

COMRIE, SAINT FILLANS AND MONZIEVAIRD.

COMRIE is a parish and village—the latter respectable and populous, is 58 miles N. W. from Edinburgh, 24 W. from Perth, and 6½ W. from Crieff; situated in a beautiful and romantic valley at the foot of the Grampians, and on the north bank of the Earn, at the junction of the Lednock. Loch Earn lies at the western extremity of the parish, and from it flows the beautiful Earn, along which there is a public road through the valley of Strathearn. In the village the manufacture of woollens is carried on to a limited extent. There are two branch banks, and a reading room, the latter well suppied with local and foreign papers, periodicals, &c. The beautiful scenery in the neighbourhood of Comrie and Saint Fillans attracts a considerable number of visitors during the summer. A new line of railway is (1866) in course of construction, in connection with the Crieff and Methvin Junction. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel, are the places of worship—the first-mentioned is a handsome and modern building, with a fine spire. In the neighbourhood are presented some interesting and attractive objects: the most remarkable are vestiges of Roman encampments on the plain of Dalginross, several Druidical circles, and a monument of granite, seventy-two feet high, erected in 1815, to the memory of the late Lord Melville. There is also another memorial, formed of the same material, eighty feet high, to the memory of the late Sir David Baird. Five fairs are held in the year, namely, Saint Kenach's on the 22nd of March, the first Tuesday in May, the 11th of July, the 8th of November, and the 4th of December.

MONZIEVAIRD parish includes the abrogated parish of Strowan; thus united, it is bounded on the north by Comrie and Monzie, by the former also on the west, by Muthill on the south, and by Crieff on the east. The river Earn passes through the district from west to east; and in the neigbourhood of this stream the country is beautiful, well planted, and enclosed. There are several small lakes in the parish, among which Monzievaird lake, situated at the bottom of a fine wood, and well stored with pike, perch, and eels, is a delightful object to passengers, and a great ornament to the pleasure grounds of Ochtertyre. On the banks of the lake a fine repeating echo is produced. There are some other seats of great beauty and taste, among which Lawers is the most distinguished. It was in this parish that the atrocious act of annihilation was all but carried into effect upon the clan Murray, by the clan Drummond. The latter being the most powerful, collected the men, women, and children belonging to the Murray clan, in the old Parish church, and set fire to it, when every soul was burned, save one, who leaped out of a window, and was caught in the arms of one of the Drummonds, who being more humane than the rest, saved the man's life. There is a church and Parochial school in the parish.

SAINT FILLANS is a small hamlet in the parish of Comrie 5½ miles from that village, pleasantly situated at the foot of Loch Earn, where boats are kept for the accommodation of fishing parties or other visitors, who are attracted hither by the delightful scenery of this district. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, and a Free church; and there is an excellent inn, affording every accommodation to gentlemen during the fishing and shooting season.

COUPAR ANGUS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BURRELTON, WOODSIDE, WASHINGTON, AND BALBROGIE

COUPAR ANGUS is a neat market town, in the parish of its name; 15 miles N.W. from Dundee, 12¼ E. by N. from Perth, and 4¾ miles from Blairgowrie. It is a station on the Scottish North-Eastern Railway, and pleasantly situated on the Isla, a few miles above its junction with the Tay, on the main roads from Dundee to Blairgowrie, and from Perth to Forfar. A branch of the Scottish North-Eastern Railway is now in operation from Coupar to Blairgowrie. A small stream, tributary to the Isla, divides the town into two parts; that portion which lies to the south of this rivulet is all that belongs to the county of Angus (or Forfar). In ancient times this place was the seat of an abbey of Cistercian monks, founded by Malcolm IV. in 1164, and endowed with considerable revenues by that monarch. At the reformation this edifice was destroyed by a mob from Perth; its ruins are sufficient to indicate that it was an establishment of considerable magnitude. The remains occupy part of the site of a Roman camp, said to have been formed by the army of Agricola in his seventh expedition. The town is compact and well built, and has the advantage of being lighted with gas, and considerable improvements have been made. The venerable steeple in Queen-street, is used as a clock tower. The street formerly called Abbey-street, is now Queen-street, to perpetuate the remembrance of Her Majesty's transit through Coupar Angus in 1849. Considerable quantities of linen fabrics are manufactured here. Three large new power loom factories are in full operation, adding considerably to the prosperity of the place, and there is a tannery, several saw mills, and a farina works in the neighbourhood. The 'Royal' (of which Mr. Gill is proprietor), is the principal hotel here. There are three banking establishments, namely, branches respectively of the 'National Bank of Scotland,' the 'Central Bank of Scotland,' and the 'Union Bank of Scotland,' also a Savings' Bank. The town is governed by commissioners of police and police magistrates under the provisions of the Police Act of 1850. A justice court is held occasionally, and a sheriff's court on the second Thursdays in January, April, July and October. At both these courts claims for small debts are adjudicated.

The old Parish Church was an ancient building, but was so far decayed as to necessitate its being taken down. A larger and more elaborate edifice, in the Gothic style, has been erected on the site: Mr. Carver, of Kinloch, Meigle, was the architect. The church has a large graveyard around it, in which are several tombs and monuments of venerable date. This edifice stands in Forfarshire. There is a Free church, with a schoolroom adjoining, and there are four other places of worship not connected with the Establishment. The parish of Coupar Angus extends five miles along the east bank of the river Isla, varying from one to two miles in breadth; the surface, arable and meadow land, is well cultivated and enclosed. Within the limits of the parish are the villages of BALBROGIE and WASHINGTON, both in the southern part of the district. There is a market for grain, cattle, &c. every Thursday. Fairs, the third Thursday in March for horses and cattle; the third Monday in May for cattle, sheep and hiring; and for horses, sheep and cattle the third Thursday in July; and for cattle sheep and hiring the third Monday in November: and a cattle market held on the third Monday in November, December, January, February, March and April.

BYRRELTON and WOODSIDE are villages lying close together, in the parish of Cargill, on the road from Coupar Angus to Perth; distant two miles from the former and eleven from the latter place. There is a station of the Scottish North-Eatsern Railway at Woodside, a Free church, and two schools.

CRIEFF,

WITH THE PARISHES OF MONZIE, FOWLIS WESTER, AND MADDERTY, AND THE VILLAGES OF HARRIOTFIELD, GLENALMOND, GILMERTON, BUCHANTY, LOGIEALMOND, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CRIEFF is a parish, market town, and burgh under the General Police (Scotland) Act, 1862. The town is 22 miles N. from Stirling, 17 W. from Perth, and 6¾ E. from Comrie; situated in Upper Strathearn, one of the most delightful districts of Scotland, on the southern declivity of a hill near the Grampians, having the Earn and several other streams at the bottom, backed by hills, crags, and the Knock of Crieff, all of considerable altitude—the outports of the ancient Grampians and the bulwarks of Scottish independence. Upper Strathearn occupies the mouth of an important pass at the Sma' Glen, where the Romans had a station, and where tradition lays the bones of Ossian, and points to a fragment of his displaced tombstone. It proceeds into the Highlands of Perthshire, having a wild mountainous region on the one side, and rich soft vales on the other. Crieff is a thriving and increasing town—deriving no small advantage from the resort, in the summer months, of invalids and others, who are attracted by the beauty of the scenery and the salubrity of its situation. During the past few years a great improvement has been made by the erection of commodious villas for the accommodation of the better class of summer visitors, every encouragement to building having been given by Lord Willoughby de Eresby, Anthony Murray, Esq., of Crieff, and Alexander Monteath, Esq., of Broich, the principal landed proprietors in the immediate neighbourhood. Crieff has been lauded as the Montpelier of Scotland; and its salubrity of air and beauty of scenery go far to entitle it to this appellation. The healthiness of the locality is attested by the returns of the Registrar, which show that the mortality of the parish is lower than in any even of the rural districts of Scotland. As regards railway communication, Crieff is connected with the railway system of the country by the Crieff Junction (now the property of the Caledonian Railway), and by the Methven and Crieff Junction Railway, and a branch is in course of formation to Comrie. It is favoured, too, in being the seat of educational establishments of the first order. Among these, is Morison's Academy, endowed by the late Thomas Morison, builder, Edinburgh, who bequeathed £12,000 for this purpose. When this sum had considerably accumulated, his trustees purchased the fine site on which the academy is erected. It is intended to give a complete education to the sons and daughters of the middle classes (the departments being separate). It is conducted by a rector and an ample staff of assistants, and has attracted pupils from all parts of the kingdom: the trustees have recently purchased St. Margaret's College, as a residence for the Rector, and for the accommodation of boarders. Taylor's Institution, for the endowment of which William Taylor, of Cornton, who died in 1841, left his whole fortune 'for educating the children of the [poor in the most useful branches of education, and for the formation of a suitable library, with lectures on such branches of science as may interest the community at large, and tend to elevate their intellectual character and promote their temporal happiness;' for these purposes, an elegant building, with convenient house for the master, has been erected at the east end of the town. Among the public establishments or institutions may be named a mechanics' institute, several libraries, a town-hall, a masonic hall, and a large assembly-room. The principal branches of trade carried on here are comprised in the manufacture of tartans, shawls, gala-plaids, and other fabrics in woollen and cotton, tanning, and grain mills. The mills engaged in the manufacture of tartans, &c., before mentioned, belong to Messrs. M'Ewan and Sons, and to Mr. Mitchell, who employ a considerable number of hands. There are two excellent hotels, one called the Drummond Arms, in James-square, and the other the Commercial, in King-street. In the town are four branch banks, and a National Security Savings' Bank; and two newspapers are published here—the 'Strathearn Herald' and the 'Crieff Journal;' both have a good circulation in the district of Strathearn. A sheriff's small debt court is held four times a year, namely, on the first Saturday in February, May, August, and November. The places of worship are the East and West Parish Churches, a Free Church, and others for United Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Baptists. The weekly grain market is held on Tuesday, and fairs are held on the first Tuesday of each month.

The parish of MONZIE, which is about three miles north-east of Crieff, lies on the south side of the Grampians; it is a mountainous district, not above one-third part being arable—the remainder heath and moss; it is watered by the Almond, the Keltie, and the Shaggie, upon which are several romantic cascades. The only inhabited portions of the district are two valleys, separated from each other by a ridge of hills four miles broad. The church is a modern building; near it, on the banks of the rivulet, is the Parochial school.

FOWLIS WESTER is a parish in the district of Strathearn, and lying north east of Crieff; it is intersected by the river Almond, which here flows eastward to the Tay. The parish is now under fine cultivation and well enclosed.

MADDERTY is a small parish about five miles east from Crieff: the inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Here is an Established church, a Parochial and a day school.

DOUNE, DEANSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DOUNE is a respectable and thriving village in the parish of Kilmadock and district of Monteith, 44 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 35 S.W. from Perth, 19 S. from Crieff, 9 N.W. from Stirling, 8 S.E. from Callander, 4 N. from Thornhill, and the same distance W. from Dunblane. The Dunblane, Doune, and Callander Branch of the Caledonian Railway possesses a station here. The town occupies a pleasant situation on the north bank of the Teith, and consists principally of three streets, radiating from a centre, where the market cross stands. Doune was formerly noted for its manufacture of Highland pistols, which branch has long become extinct. The cotton manufacture is extensively carried on; and there are established in Doune branches of the 'Union Bank of Scotland,' and 'Royal Bank of Scotland.'

In 1826 a new parish church was erected; its style is Gothic, with a handsome tower; the interior is ornamented with a beautiful pulpit, particularly worthy of notice: for this public work the parishioners are indebted to the Earl of Moray, the patron and chief heritor of the parish, and owner of Doune Castle, once the family seat of the Earls of Monteith. The ruins of this once noble castle stand in the immediate neighbourhood, upon an elevated peninsula formed by the junction of the Ardoch water with the Teith. To judge from the massiveness and extent of its remains, the castle appears to have belonged to that first-rate order of Scottish fortresses of which those of Edinburgh, Stirling, and Dumbarton afford entire specimens. There still remains one huge square building, the walls of which are forty feet high and ten feet thick, together with a tower which rises above the rest to the height of eighty feet, ascending proudly over the lofty trees that encompass the place, and overlooking a country eminent in beauty and fertility to whatever direction the eye may be turned. The fine old bridge which crosses the Teith a little above the castle was erected by Robert Spittal, a native of Stirling, who had amassed a fortune by being tailor to Margaret of England, widow of James IV: this princess was frequently an inhabitant of Doune Castle, and the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots is also said to have resided some time in it. The parish of Kilmadock comprises a district of great fertility; the land upon the banks of the Forth and Teith produce abundant crops of every species of grain: from the level margin of the former river the ground rises gradually to the Grampian mountains, which form the northern boundary of the parish; the face of the country here is delightful, with many romantic features. A short distance from Doune is the small village of DEANSTON, mainly supported by the cotton manufacture before mentioned. Fairs are held in Doune on the second Wednesday in May, the last Wednesday in July, the first Tuesday and Wednesday and the fourth Wednesday in November.

DUNBARNY, WITH BRIDGE OF EARN.

DUNBARNY (or Dumbarny) parish is situated in the south eastern part of the country, occupying a rich portion of Strathearn district. The church of Dunbarny is close by the village of the BRIDGE OF EARN, which latter is three miles and a half from Perth. Since the latter village has become populous and extensive, it has assumed the character of the capital of the district, while the name of the parish has sunk into comparitive insignificance. Pitkeathly spring, near the Bridge of Earn, has been long celebrated for affording relief to those afflicted with the gravel, scurvy, &c.; the scenery around is beautiful and romantic. The great north road passes through the district towards Perth; and the Edinburgh and Northern Railway includes in its route the BRIDGE OF EARN, where a station for that line is established. The parish of Dunbarny occupies the south-eastern part of Perthshire, and a pleasant part of Strathearn, north from Dron. It is bounded by the hill of Mordon (or Moncrieff), on the north, and on the west by Forgandenny. It is intersected by the river Earn in various windings; the flat and rising grounds being adorned with plantations, avenues, and refreshing hedgerows. The Earn is crossed in this parish by a handsome bridge giving its name to the village above mentioned.

POST OFFICE, BRIDGE OF EARN, Janet Gorme, Post Mistress.—Letters from Perth and the north arrive at half-past six morning and at twenty minutes past four afternoon, and are despatched thereto at fifty minutes past six morning and at fifty two minutes past six evening.

Letters from Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the south arrive at fifty minutes past eight morning and at fifty two minutes past six evening, and are despatched thereto at fifty minutes past six morning, at twenty minutes past four afternoon, and at fifty two minutes past six evening.

DUNBLANE

Is a small ancient city, in the parish of its name, and is the capital of the western district of Perthshire, 41 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 33 N.E. from Glasgow, 28 S.W. from Perth, 11 from Callander, and 3 from Doune, charmingly situated on the bank of the river Allan, which flows through a great part of the parish, and affords excellent sport to the angler, there being a good supply of fine trout, besides salmon and grilse in their season. Dunblane is much resorted to in the summer season as a watering place, there being an excellent mineral spring on the property of the Hon. Captain Arthur H. Drummond, of Cromlix, in the vicinity of the town. The Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian Railway passes through, and has a station in the town, and the Dunblane, Doune and Callandar branch commences here. Dunblane was formerly the see of a bishop, founded by David I.; and the great object of attraction in the present day is what was once the cathedral, the choir of which is now the Parish Church, all the other parts of the edifice being in a state of decay. It stands on an eminence on the eastern bank of the Allan, overlooking the town, and is a large Gothic structure, with a steeple of modern erection, one hundred and twenty feet in height. That part of the town which adjoins the church, from its being composed chiefly of old dignified looking houses, exhibits the appearance of what is termed the 'Close,' or the precinct of a cathedral. The good and learned Leighton, whose fame is in all the churches, was at one time Bishop of Dunblane, and bequeathed his valuable library to the clergy of the diocese: the books are kept in a suitable building called the Leightonian Library, to which the public have access on very easy terms.

Dunblane is a place of limited trade, and not conspicuous as one of manufactures. Worsted spinning is carried on very extensively by Messrs. Alexander Wilson & Co., at their new mills, Springbank, this gives employment to a great number of the inhabitants. There is also a small mill for the manufacture of woollen cloth, and one for wool spinning in the parish, and a few of the inhabitants are employed in handloom weaving. In the High-street is the 'Dunblane Hotel,' a superior commercial and posting inn, and in the same street is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland. This place is the residence of a sheriff substitute, and other functionaries. A sheriff's court for the recovery of small debts, and for ordinary business, is held every Wednesday, and justice of peace courts occasionally. The court-house and prison are modern buildings, convenient to their respective purposes.

The places of worship are the Parish church (before noticed), a Free church, an United Presbyterian and a handsome Episcopal chapel. Besides the Parochial School, which is both well conducted and well attended, there are others connected with the Free and Episcopal churches, and one for infants. The country to the south of the town is very beautiful, and is finely ornamented with plantations. The ride from Dunblane to Stirling is much and justly admired. The vale of Strathallan, through which flows the river Allan, lies to the north and east of the town. The fields on the banks of the river are fertile, but as the grounds approach the hills they are of a moorish character, although excellently adapted for the purpose of pasture; and the dairy produce of this district is in high repute. At the lower end of the town, is the romantic walk of Kippenross, the property of John Stirling, Esq., near to the end of which is a plain tree, supposed to be the largest in Scotland, the circumference of the trunk in the smallest part being nearly twenty feet; where the branches separate, fully twenty-seven feet, and close to the ground forty-two feet seven inches; the height of the tree is a hundred feet; and has attained the age, it is said, of four hundred and sixty-five years. About halfway between Dunblane and the Bridge of Allan is Keir House, the residence of Sir William Stirling Maxwell, Bart., M.P. The grounds are laid out with great taste, and contains fine specimens of forest trees, and ornamental flower gardens; they are kindly thrown open to visitors from two till six on Friday.

A few miles from the town is Sheriffmuir, on which a severe conflict took place in November, 1715, between the royal forces, under the Duke of Argyle, and the rebel army, commanded by the Earl of Mar. Here on the summit of a hill are some large stones enclosed by iron rails, said to be placed where the standard was erected. Prince Charles arrived at Dunblane on the 11th of September, 1745, on his way to the low country, and remained a night at the house of the Laird of Balhaldie, now the residence of Mr. M'Aull. The room in which the prince held his levee, on the morning of his departure, is courteously shown to the enquiring visitor. Dunblane bestows the title of viscount on the Duke of Leeds. There was formerly a market held here, and numerous fairs, but they have all fallen into disuse.

POST OFFICE, High Street, DUNBLANE, Margaret Dawson, Post Mistress.—Letters from Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the South arrive at half-past eight morning, and at forty minutes past ten night, and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes past four afternoon, and at forty minutes past seven and forty-five minutes past nine evening.

Letters from Perth and the North arrive at five and half-past eight evening, and are despatched thereto at forty minutes past seven morning, and at forty-five minutes past nine night.

DUNKELD,

LITTLE DUNKELD, BIRNAM, BUTTERSTONE, CAPUTH, DALGUISE, DOWALLY, DRUMOUR, MEIKLEOUR, MURTHLY, SPITTALFIELD, INVER, STRATHBRAAN, AND TORWOOD.

DUNKELD is a small but interesting and handsome town, and burgh of barony, partly in the united parishes of Dunkeld, Dowally, and partly in that of Caputh; 57 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh (by rail 60 miles), 24 E. from Kenmore, 15 N.N.W. from Perth, and 12 W. from Blairgowrie; delightfully situated in the bosom of an amphitheatre of hills, at the spot where the highlands and lowlands appear to meet, and where the Tay first escapes from its mountain fastnesses to the smiling land to which it contributes so much additional fertility and beauty. The town is of great antiquity, and was the capital of ancient Caledonia. The monastery of the Culdees is noticed so early as 729, and is recorded to have been built by Constantine, third king of the Picts. David I., in 1127, converted it into a bishopric. The first bishop of this see, whose name appears prominently in history, is the heroic William Sinclair, who assumed the mitre in 1312: he built the choir, which is still entire and converted into the parish church (which in 1818, at a cost of £6,000, was very elegantly fitted up); the other parts of the cathedral have been abandoned to the operations of time and the seasons, and have sunk into a state of dilapidation; in the early part of the sixteenth century the see of Dunkeld was honoured by no less distinguished an occupant than the learned Gavin Douglas, a younger son of the Earl of Angus. The situation of the cathedral, in the midst of a fine grove on the left bank of the Tay, sequestered from the gaze of the town, must highly interest the contemplative stranger; indeed the scenery which surrounds Dunkeld has long been the subject of admiration. Nature has been bountiful to this district, and her favours were duly appreciated and skilfully assisted by the late noble proprietor, the Duke of Athole, who conducted his operations and embellishments with such consummate taste as to produce one of the most beautiful and picturesque retreats that is to be found in all Scotland, and which has long been the resort, as it has been the delight of all tourists and visitors—excellent accommodations are furnished by two very extensive and superior hotels. Fisher's Royal Hotel has received considerable additions and improvements; it comprises forty bed-rooms, and several elegant sitting-rooms, besides appropriate servants' apartments. The bridge of Tay, at this place, is a magnificent structure of seven arches, the total span of which is six hundred and eighty-five feet, width twenty-seven feet, water-way four hundred and forty-six feet, and its greatest height fifty-seven feet. Its erection was commenced in 1805, and completed in 1809, at a cost of upwards of £30,000; £5,000 of which was contributed by government, and the remainder disbursed by the late public spirited nobleman. The bridge was constructed chiefly on dry land, and the river afterwards turned to flow through its finely formed arches; a Mr. Brown was the architect. The view from this bridge is, in every direction, remarkably fine. Near the town is a seat of the noble family of Athole, the gardens belonging to which, the cascades, the extensive pleasure grounds, and the lovely scenery, are most attractive objects; among these, Ossian's Hall, the rumbling bridge, and several falls of the river Bran, are pointed out to the visitor. In these grounds are two very fine trees called 'the mother larches,' being the first grown in Britain; they were planted in 1737, and are one hundred feet high; one of them measures fifteen feet in circumference at three feet from the ground. The manufacture of linen goods was at one time the staple of Dunkeld, but that branch has materially declined, and there is little business transacted in it. Productive slate quarries are worked by the Messrs. Harris. There are branches of the three following respectable banking establishments settled here, namely, the Central Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland. Dunkeld is a burgh of barony, and as such, governed by a baron-bailie, who is appointed by the Duke of Athole. A justice of the peace court sits once a month, and a sheriff small debt court once a quarter, for the recovery of sums not exceeding £8 6s. 8d. For the education of youth there is an establishment called the Royal Grammar School, and one for females called the Duchess of Athole's School, £1,200 being given by Her Grace for its erection. The weekly market is held on Saturday, and the fairs 14th February, 5th April, and the 20th June,—should any of these fall on Saturday, Sunday, or Monday, the fairs take place the following Tuesday; another is held on the second Tuesday in November.

LITTLE DUNKELD, contrary to its distinctive appellative, is an extensive parish, lying on the west or right bank of the Tay, opposite to Dunkeld above described. The village is situated at the south end of the bridge, which carries the road across to Dunkeld. The parish forms a kind of irregular triangle, and is disposed by nature into three districts; first, the district of MURTHLY, extending from Kinclaven to the village of INVER; the surface of this district is beautifully varied, its soil fertile, and generally well enclosed and cultivated; it is adorned by Murthly House, the seat of the Stewarts of Grandtully, and by Birnam Hill, rendered classical by Shakspere, and rising in rude magnificence from the edge of the river.

BIRNAM, which is becoming very populous, is situated three-quarters of a mile from Dunkeld, and is a station on the Highland Railway Company's line. The Birnam Hotel, of which Mr. John B. Pople is the proprietor, is a building in the Saxon-Gothic style, surrounded with fine pleasure grounds, and contains a public hall, perhaps one of the finest in the kingdom. The second district extends from Inver, along the banks of the Tay to Grandtully, a space of ten miles: here the fields are level, and the whole has the appearance of an almost continued series of beautiful gardens. The third division, which is separated from the second by a hilly tract of considerable elevation, is a valley of about nine miles in length: the soil is generally of a fertile clay or loam, grey freestone, and slate. The mineral productions that have been hitherto discovered in the parish, are confined to lead ore and argillaceous earth. Little Dunkeld parish is traversed by the military road from Perth to Inverness.

DUNNING,

FORTEVIOT, FORGANDENNY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNNING is rather an extensive parish, containing a neat village of its name—the latter nine miles S.W. from Perth, and 5 E. from Auchterarder; situated near the centre of the district, on the banks of the Dunning water (a tributary of the Earn), half a mile north of the base of the Ochil range of hills, and about two miles from the river Earn. The village, which contains a number of good houses, is under the control of a baron bailie. The places of worship are the parish and Free churches, and United Presbyterian and Episcopalian chapels. The steeple of the Parish church is of very ancient date, and is supposed to be of Pictish origin. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland is established in the village. The village was burnt to the ground by the Earl of Mar's army, on the retreat from Sheriffmuir to Perth. A thorn that was planted at that time, in the centre of the ruins, is still to be seen, and from its shape, size, and appearance it at once attracts the stranger's attention. It is recorded that at the conflagration of the village, only one house escaped (which is still standing), and that by an ingenious device on the part of its owner, —a female, who, while the rest of the cottages were in flames, threw parcels of wet straw and refuse of flax on the fire within the house, which raised such a smoke round this particular dwelling, that, believing it to be in a fair way of demolition, the soldiers did not molest it. A corn market is held every Wednesday. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in April, on the 20th of June, and on the Monday before the first Tuesday in October.

FORTEVIOT is a parish in the district of Strathearn and the greater portion in the vale of Earn—the river of that name passing through it. The middle portion is beautifully wooded and enclosed, and is intersected by the May, which joins the Earn nearly opposite Dupplin Castle. The village of Forteviot, which is situated on the right bank of the last-named stream, is an ancient capital of the Pictish kingdom, but nothing now remains to mark a royal seat. At bankhead, near Dupplin Castle, an ancient cross may be seen, and one also on the opposite height of Dromochy, both which are supposed to mark the approaches to Hally hill, where, in the time of Charles I., vestiges of a palace were in existence. It was on the heights here that the battle of Dupplin was fought. The river May, before mentioned, winds delightfully through the verdant knolls of the Ochils, and thence through the picturesque grounds of the Invermay, flowing on and forming in its course beautiful falls, until it becomes lost for a time in the intricate course of the Hummel-Rummel, a cataract at Mackarcey Linn, that tumbles for more than thirty feet in a perpendicular fall, into a romantic glen. About 300 yards from the village is a station belonging to the Scottish Central Railway.

FORGANDENNY is a parish and village; the latter is about four miles S. from Perth, 5 E. from Dunning, and 3 W. from Bridge of Earn. The village is very small, and contains an Established and a Free church, also a Parochial school. There is a station on the Caledonian line about one mile distant.

ERROL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABERNYTE, INCHTURE, KILSPINDIE, KINNAIRD, LONGFORGAN, SAINT MADOES, FINDO GASK, AND FOWLIS EASTER.

ERROL, is a parish in the carse of Gowrie, five miles and a half in length and nearly three in breadth, stretching across the carse from the foot of the hill to the banks of the Tay. The soil is rich and fertile, and under the most productive tillage: it is also highly favourable to the growth of fruit trees. The country is intersected with small tracts of water called 'pows,' collected chiefly from the trenches opened for draining the grounds. As the tide and current in the Tay were making great encroachments, the proprietors of the land found it necessary to build strong walls to arrest their usurpation. It is recorded that this district receives the name of Errol, signifying the flight of a hawk, from the circumstance of the family of Hay, who, having fought gallantly under Luncartney, received for their services, from the king, a gift of as much land in the carse of Gowrie as a hawk flew over. Be this account correct or merely originating in traditionary legend. It is certain that the noble family of Hay takes the title of Earl of Errol from the appellation of the parish; the small village named after it, is ten miles E. from Perth, occupying a beautiful situation on a rising ground, embowered in trees, commanding a prospect of the Tay and Carse almost as far east as Dundee. A rivulet flows past it to the Tay, and forms a small harbour at its mouth; and about a mile from the village is a station on the Dundee and Perth line of railway. The village is gas lighted. The Parish church is a very handsome building on a commanding site; the tower may be seen at a considerable distance; there is also a substantial and capacious Free church, and one for United Presbyterians.

POST OFFICE, Railway Station, ERROL, Elizabeth Adam, Post Mistress.—Letters from Edinburgh, Perth England, the West Country, Ireland, and Foreign arrive at twelve night, and forty minutes past nine morning, and are despatched at twenty-five minutes past three afternoon, and forty minutes past six evening.

Letters from Dundee, Inchture, Carnoustie and Newport arrive at twenty-five minutes past three afternoon, and forty minutes past six evening, and are despatched at forty minutes past twelve, and forty minutes past nine morning.

Letters from Kilspindie, Pitroddie and Roadside arrive (by foot post) at seven morning, and are despatched at the same time.

FORTINGAL, KINLOCK-RANNOCH & KELTNEY BURN.

FORTINGAL is a parish in the district of Bredalbane. The village, a small one, is 84 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 42 N.W. from Perth, 15½ N.N.E. from Killin, 5½ S.W. from Dull, and 5 W. from Kenmore, situated on the left bank of the river Lyon, about three miles from its junction with the Tay. The parish lies in the midst of the Grampians, and is only useful for sheep pasture. Including the abolished parish of Kilchonan, it extends thirty seven miles in length by seventeen in breadth, occupying a large tract of Highland territory in the north-west part of the county. The district abounds in lakes, rivers and woods; the chief of the former being Loch Rannoch, about eleven miles in length, whose banks are finely wooded. Not far from the southern bank of the lake are the barracks called GEORGETOWN. In this district rises the Schehallion, one of the highest mountains in Scotland, where Dr. Maskelyne, astronomer royal, some years ago, made his observations on the powers of attraction. This parish is so wild and mountainous that, prior to the year 1745, the civil power could not reach it. It was the receptacle of the freebooters, who laid the country under that species of contribution so well known by the name of 'black mail.' The inhabitants are now steady and industrious. The small villages of KINLOCH RANNOCH and KELTNEY BURN, are also in this parish. Fairs are held in the village, April the 28th, August the 20th, and December the 6th.

POST OFFICE, FORTINGAL, John Campbell, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Abergeldy) at half-past two afternoon, and are despatched thereto at half-past seven evening.

KENMORE, ACHARN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of KENMORE lies in the Highland district of Breadalbane, surrounding the large and beautiful lake Loch Tay, which is sixteen miles in length, varying from one to two in breadth. The waters of the lake, which seldom or never freeze, abound with salmon and other fish. The clean little village of Kenmore, with its kirk and white cottages, occupy a lovely eminence at the north-east end of the loch, close by the point where it opens into a river, over which is thrown a handsome bridge of five arches. The village is 80 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.W. from Perth, 24 W. from Dunkeld, 16 N.E. from Killin, and 5 E. from Fortingal. In the vale below the village are the park and castle of Taymouth, the magnificent seat of the Earl of Breadalbane. The mansion some years since, was much enlarged and improved by the late marquis, and it now ranks amongst the most elegant modern castellated mansions in Scotland. This spot is a favourite point in a tour of the Highlands, and hence is much visited in summer. The district comprises objects both sublime and beautiful; among the former is the majestic mountain, Ben Lawers, which rises, on the north-east side of the loch to the height of 3,945 feet. Fairs are on the first Tuesday in March, and on the 2nd of November (both old style), and the 28th of June, the 26th of July, the 17th of September, and the 24th of December.

ACHARN is a small village in Kenmore parish, situated about two miles from the village of Kenmore, on the east side of Loch-Tay. Near the village, in a woody glen are the celebrated Falls of Acharn. The Breadalbane family have built a grotto (called the 'Hermitage,), opposite to the greatest fall, where the water suddenly precipitates itself over a projecting rock, a distance, it is said, of two hundred and forty feet.

KILLIN, WITH THE VILLAGE OF CLIFTON.

KILLIN, a mountainous and extensive parish in the Highland district of Breadalbane—the village, a small one, is 74 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.N.W. from Stirling, 27 W. by N. from Crieff, 22¼ N. from Callander, 16 S.W. from Kenmore, and 8 from Loch-earn Head, occupying a delightful and picturesque situation at the west end of the celebrated Loch Tay, and near the confluence of the rivers Lochy and Dochart with the waters of the lake. Anglers visiting this fine Loch, and residing at the hotel, have the privilege, under certain conditions, of fishing over the best part of the Loch. The boats are obtained from the proprietors of the hotel. On a small island, formed by two branches of the river, and much in the shape of a coffin, is the burial place of the M'Nab clan. On one of the trees of the island may be seen a branch, which, severed from its parent stem by a storm in February, 1806, attached itself to a neighbouring tree, and is now growing with its branches downwards. A small eminence, in the neighbourhood of Killin, is pointed out as the place of sepulture of the famed highland hero Fingal. The village is noted for the picturesque beauty of its situation, and, like Kenmore, is a favourable point of tour of the central Highlands. Mr. M'Pherson's commercial and family hotel affords every accommodation for visitors.

Besides Killin, there is another village in the western part of the parish, called CLIFTON. To view the scenery of this district to advantage, the traveller is advised to take the road on the south-east side of the lake; and in passing down its banks, it is worth while to stop a little at a woody glen, where the family of Breadalbane have built a grotto opposite to a cascade, which is very well deserving of attention. This is named the Fall's of Acharn, and has two or three falls in its descent. The greatest, however, is that which is opposite to the hermitage, where it suddenly precipitates itself over a projecting rock two hundred and forty feet. The hills here are mostly green, and afford good pasturage. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in January, the 5th and 12th of May, the Friday before Doune first of November fair, and the first Tuesday in November (old style).

POST OFFICE, KILLIN, William Walker, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Crieff) at half-past eight morning, and are despatched thereto at fifteen minutes past one afternoon.

KINCARDINE,

CULROSS, COMRIE BRIDGE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KINCARDINE (or Kincardine-on-Forth) is a seaport town and burgh of barony, in the parish of TULLIALLAN; 22 miles S. from Perth, 15 W. from North Queensferry, 10 W. from Dunfermline, 6 W. from Torryburn, and 5 E. from Alloa; situated in the southern detached part of the county, on the north bank of the Frith of Forth. At one time this place was called West Pans, from the salt works established in it, but these have long ceased to exist. There are two banking establishments here—the one a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, the other the Commercial Bank of Scotland. About twelve ship, or part ship owners are settled in Kincardine; there are two rope, canvas and sail cloth manufactories, and shipbuilding is carried on by Messrs. Duncan, Wright & Son. There is a commodious harbour and an excellent quay, which, together with the good anchorage ground in the Forth, renders this haven an eligible refuge for vessels in distress; the harbour will admit vessels of from three hundred to four hundred tons burthen. The town is irregularly built; there are some good houses, but the streets are narrow, and, upon the whole, it is a place not of prepossessing appearance. The church, erected some years ago, is a very handsome and ornamental structure; the other places of worship are a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church. The old church remains standing in the burial ground, and exhibits an interesting ruin—the steeple, however, being perfect. The principal seat in the vicinity is Tulliallan Castle, from which an extensive view of the surrounding country is commanded. A fair is held in Kincardine on the last Friday in August.

CULROSS is an ancient town and representative burgh, in the parish of its name, four miles from Kincardine; situated partly on the acclivity of a hill rising from the Forth, the principal street running north from the shore. It formerly carried on an extensive traffic in salt and coal, and previous to the union between the two countries, one hundred and seventy foreign vessels have been at one time in the roads, this traffic is now entirely lost. The Earl of Dundonald erected some very extensive works for extracting tar, naptha, and volatile salt from coal; but the speculation proving unproductive it was abandoned, and the works allowed to go to ruin. Culross was erected into a royal burgh by James VI., in 1588; it has a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and councillors. The burgh is united with the towns of Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dumfermline in returning one member to parliament.

The town and its vicinity possess many objects of antiquity. In 1278, a monastery was founded, on rising ground behind the town, by Malcolm, Thane of Fife; considerable remains of this structure are yet extant. On the north side was the abbey church, which had a steeple in the centre, the latter still entire, as is also a part of the church some years since repaired, and now used for public service by the parish. In a recess opposite the doorway is a monument to Sir George Bruce, in beautiful white marble, lying besides his lady; and along a low settle are arranged their seven children in kneeling posture. To the west of the town, on the banks of the Forth, is Castlehill, anciently called Dunnemart Castle, meaning, 'the castle near the sea;' it was the stronghold of the Macduffs, and according to tradition, was the horrible scene of the murder of Lady Macduff and her children, perpetrated by order of the ambitious and sanguinary Macbeth; the fabric is now a total ruin. Near the church is a school endowed by the late Patrick Geddes, Esq., for twenty children of both sexes. A fair is held on the last Tuesday in July, for foot and boat races, or other sports.

KIRKMICHAEL

IS an extensive parish, in the south-eastern corner of of the county, adjoining Aberdeenshire on the north, and the county of Forfar on the east; it extends seventeen miles in length, by from six to seven in breadth, comprehending the whole Glenshee district, and part of that of Strathardie. On some of the hills of this district, tradition fixes the scene as that where many of the Fingalian exploits were performed. A military way from Coupar Angus to Fort George proceeds through the northern part of the parish, by the Spittal of Glenshee. The southern part of the district is intersected by the Ardie, which is crossed by a stone bridge of two arches, and a good road passes along the left bank of the river. In this part of the parish stands the village and kirk, at a distance of 72 miles N. from Edinburgh, 29 N. from Perth, 12½ from Pitlochry, and 14 N.W. from Blairgowrie. There is a handsome Free church, which will seat five hundred persons, and a constabulary force in the village.

POST OFFICE, KIRKMICHAEL, James Robertson, Post Master.—Letters from all parts (except Pitlochry) arrive from Blairgowrie at one afternoon, and are despatched at three afternoon.
Letters from Pitlochry arrive at half-past one, and are despatched at half-past two afternoon.

MEIGLE

IS a parish in the district of Strathmore—the village or small town—an ancient one, and the seat of a presbytery, is 61 miles N. from Edinburgh, 18 N. by E from Perth, 13½ N.N.W. from Dundee, 9 S S.W. from Kirriemuir, 7½ W. from Glammis, 5 N. from Coupar Angus, and 4 S. from Alyth: pleasantly situated on the bank of the Isla and is a station on the Scottish North-Eastern line. A branch from Meigle to Alyth, also passes close to Meigle village. The parish is four miles and a half in length and two in breadth, is fertile and well cultivated, and, besides the Isla, is watered by the Dean, which is the northern boundary of the district. There are some beautiful seats in this part of the county, particularly Belmont Castle, the gardens and fine plantations of which combine to render it the most delightful residence in all Strathmore. In one of the enclosures is pointed out a tumulus, where, it is said the murderous Macbeth was deprived of his usurped power and his life in his fatal encounter with Macduff. A number of stones and monuments, supposed to be of Pictish origin, are also to be seen in this vicinity. In the churchyard of Meigle are some very old monuments, which, tradition asserts to be the grave of Queen Vanoria, the unfaithful wife of King Arthur; the figures, which it is said, once delineated the history of Vanoria, are so defaced and dilapidated as to render all attempts at deciphering their meaning a fruitless task. About a mile north-east of the village, at the junction of the Isla and the Dean, are the remains of a Roman camp, called Caraen or Caerden, and noticed by General Roy in his work on the Roman antiquities of Scotland. In the village is the Strathmore Inn, of which Mrs. Colquhoun is the proprietress. A cattle market is held on the first Monday in every month, and fairs on the last Wednesday in June, and on the last Wednesday in October.

POST OFFICE, MEIGLE, James Small, Post Master.—Letters from all parts (except Alyth, Glenisla and Folda) arrive at fifty minutes past twelve noon, and fifteen minutes past ten morning, and are despatched at twenty-five minutes past two afternoon, and a quarter past six evening.

There is a despatch to Dundee, Forfar, Arbroath, Kirriemuir and Aberdeen at forty-five minutes past nine morning.

Letters arrive from Alyth, Glenisla and Folda at six evening, and are despatched at six, and twenty-five minutes past ten morning.

METHVEN,

GLENALMOND, MONEYDIE, REDGORTON, TIBBERMUIR, AND ABERDALGIE.

METHVEN is a very neat village and parish—the former six miles west from Perth; situated on the high road to Crieff, from which it is distant eleven miles. It possesses a subscription library, containing 2,240 volumes, and a body of freemasons; there is likewise an agricultural society, who hold two meetings annually, which are very respectably attended. The Perth, Almond Valley, and Methven Railway terminates here. The ancient church of Methven was collegiate, being founded 1433, for a provost and seven prebendaries, by Walter Stuart, Earl of Athol, one of the youngest sons of Robert II. About a mile from the village is Methven Castle (the residence of William Smythe, Esq.), distinguished in Scottish history as the place where King Robert was defeated by the English army, under the Earl of Pembroke, in 1306. In the parish is also Balgowan, the residence of William Thomson, Esq.; but, perhaps the most interesting object in the parish is the grave of the celebrated 'Bessy Bell and Mary Gray,' whose beauty and seclusion from the world are the subject of an admired Scottish melody. Fairs are held on the Monday preceding Amulree market in May, and fourth Thursday in October.

Trinity College, GLENALMOND, on the banks of the Almond, is ten miles from Perth, and four miles from the Perth, Almond, and Methven Railway; was projected in the year 1841, and opended in the year 1847. It was meant to assume the double purpose of promoting a proper collegiate training for the divinity students of the Scottish Episcopal church; and of establishing in Scotland a large public school, after the general model of the older English endowments. Both departments have now been in full operation for several years. The site on which the college stands was presented by Geo. Patton, Esq., of the Cairnies. The funds for the buildings, which have already cost upwards of £50,000, were raised by a general subscription throughout England and Scotland. Amongst the most munificent benefactors were the Duke of Buccleuch, the late Sir John Gladstone, Bart., the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and the Right Rev. Charles Wordsworth, the first warden of the college. The chapel, a building in the decorated style of Gothic architecture, 136 feet long by 52 feet wide, with a height of 70 feet, was erected at a cost of more than £8,000, at the sole expense of the Right Rev. C. Wordsworth. The council consists of eighteen members: namely, the seven Scotch bishops, with three Presbeters, and eight Laymen. The resident society consists of a warden, a sub-warden, a tutor in theology, and four other masters, who are assisted by visiting masters for special purposes.

The parish of MONEYDIE is a small district, comprehending a square of about two miles, bounded by the parish of Auchtergaven on the north, and by that of Redgorton on the east and south. There are, properly speaking, no hills in the parish, but only rising grounds which run northward and southward from the banks of the Shockie. Until lately Moneydie was annexed to the parish of Logie Almond.

REDGORTON parish is about six miles in length by two in breadth, extending along the Tay and Almond; besides which rivers there is the Shockie stream, and several other rivulets, each propelling considerable machinery in the district through which the waters pass. It is bounded on the north by Auchtergaven and Kinclaven, on the east by Scone, on the south and south-west by Tibbermuir and Methven, and on the west by Moneydie.

TIBBERMUIR (or Tippermuir), is a parish of about the same extent as Redgorton, and is a manufacturing district, having within it extensive bleach-fields. The ancient castle of Huntingtower is in Tibbermuir, and is worthy of notice as being formerly the seat of the Gowrie family, and the place where James VI was sometime confined, by the Earl of Gowrie and other conspirators in the year 1582. Tibbermuir has given its name to the first battle that was fought between the Marquis of Montrose and the Covenanters, though the conflict occurred more within the parish of Aberdalgie; in this sanguinary engagement the covenanting forces were totally routed.

TRINITY GASK is a parish in the lower part of Strathearn, and comprises the ancient parishes of Kinkel and Wester Gask. It extends several miles along the northern bank of the Earn. The whole of the parish is arable and well enclosed and planted.

ABERDALGIE, a parish, is washed on the south by the Earn, which here affords excellent fishing. The parish abounds in freestone, and much of the land is under plantation. Dupplin Castle, a seat of the Earl of Kinnoul, is in the parish.

POST OFFICE, METHVEN, Mary Donaldson, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive (from Perth) at twenty minutes past eight, and are despatched at twenty minutes past three afternoon.

Post Office, TIBBERMUIR, George Hill, Post Master.—Letters arrive from Huntingtower at forty minutes past seven morning, and are despatched at forty minutes past three afternoon.

MUTHILL AND ARDOCH,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BRACO AND GREENLOANING.

MUTHILL is an extensive parish lying on the borders of the Highland district, on the right bank of the Earn—the village is 19 miles N. from Stirling, 16 W. from Perth, and three S. from Crieff; situate on the great military road from Dunblane to Inverness by Tummel-bridge. About a mile to the westward stands Drummond Castle, the ancient seat of the noble family of Perth, now the residence of Lord Willoughby D'Eresby; it is finely seated on a rock at the head of the vale of Strathearn, and attracts the attention and admiration of every stranger from the beautiful prospect it commands. There is a church in ruins, said to have been built in 1419; the tower appears to be of an earlier date, and is doubtless of Pictish origin. A church was erected in 1828. In the churchyard is a very fine monument erected to the memory of Rev. William Halley, the first Presbyterian minister of the parish; a Free Church and an Episcopalian Chapel are the other places of worship, and connected with the churches are schools and a joint library. The Crieff Junction Railway passes through the parish, and has a station here. A portion of the industrious classes are employed in weaving for the large manufacturing houses. The principal object of interest in the parish, particularly to the antiquary, are two Roman camps; one at Strageath—the other at ARDOCH, a parish constituted in 1857 six miles from Muthill, the latter being considered one of the most perfect and interesting in Britain. The area of this camp is an oblong of one hundred and forty yards by one hundred and twenty-five, within the lines; the 'general's quarter,' which is a regular square of twenty yards each side, rises above the level of the camp, and contains the foundation of a house ten yards by seven. There are two other encampments adjoining, which have a communication with each other. Many years ago, various interesting relics were brought to light from beneath these ancient fortifications, such as Roman spears, helmets, fragments of bridles, and several other articles; these lay at the house of Ardoch for a considerable period, but were all carried off by some soldiers in the Duke of Argyle's army, after the battle of Sheriffmuir in 1715, and could never be recovered.

BRACO is a village in the parish of Ardoch: it contains an Established and a Free church, and a Subscription school.

GREENLOANING is a small village, also in the parish of Ardoch, about one mile distant from Braco; it is a station on the Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian line, and contains an United Presbyterian church.

PERTH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF KINFAUNS, KINNOULL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PERTH, an ancient and elegant city, royal burgh, seat of a synod and presbytery, and capital of the county to which it gives name, is 43 miles north from Edinburgh, 61 N.E. from Glasgow, 22 S.W. from Dundee, 15 s. from Dunkeld, and 16 s. from Blairgowrie. The city is situated at the opening of an extensive plain, nearly surrounded by picturesque hills, having in the distance a view of the sublime amphitheatre of the Grampians; and bounded on the north and south by two beautiful meadows, called the North and South Inches, the former containing one hundred acres, the latter seventy-two; both ornamented with noble trees, and watered by the Tay, which occasionally overflows both Inches. The Tay is one of the finest rivers in the kingdom, and is celebrated for its picturesque scenery, during its whole course, and for the value of its salmon fisheries. These Inches are for the use and recreation of the inhabitants. It is recorded that when Agricola's army saw this delightful plain and superb river, they exclaimed, as with one voice, Ecce Tiber! Ecce Campus Martius!—'Behold the Tiber! Behold the field of Mars!' Agricola pitched his camp in the middle of that field, on the spot where the city now stands. Till of late years the traces of a fortification, called Cromwell's Fort, were visible on the South Inch, but are now entirely obliterated, and elegant new buildings have from time to time been erected on part of the space it occupied. Perth for a long period held the rank of capital of Scotland, was the residence of its kings and nobles, and the seat of its parliaments. It appears this city once bore the name of St. John. At the early period when the Scots kings succeeded to the Pictish throne, the church and bridge of Perth are supposed to have been consecrated to St. John the Baptist, as the tutelary saint of that town—and consequently it progressively obtained the name of St. John's Town, but was not recognised by that name in any of the public documents of the period. Fordun, in his history, remarks that he had found in some ancient writs that the town of St. John, now called Perth, was prirorily Bertha, the contraction being Berth or Bert; and as the letters B and P are used in the Gaelic language indiscriminately, it may naturally be presumed that the Highlanders changed the pronunciation of it to Perth; and from this circumstance, it it is very probable, the present name of the place was derived—indeed, at the present time, the word Perth is pronounced by the Highlanders Peirt or Peart. The approach to Perth by the Edinburgh road is strikingly picturesque, and the descent to the South Inch terminates in a majestic avenue of trees, extending to the town. At the southern extremity of this avenue stands the extensive general prison for Scotland, built by government, in 1812, for the reception of prisoners of war. It was wholly rebuilt and re-modelled in 1842; it was then occupied as a criminal prison, and more extensive buildings erected for the purpose. The city itself is large and well built; the streets are long and spacious, well paved and gas-lighted. At the east end of Marshall-place, and forming the extreme south-eastern angle of the city, stands a fine architectural ornament, the new water reservoir, designed by the learned and accomplished Dr. Anderson, rector of the Academy, and erected under his immediate superintendence; he also devised the scheme for the supply of pure water. In all wells sunk within or near the town the water was strongly impregnated with salts, and consequently ill adapted for culinary purposes or cleanliness—the saline fluid flowing in much faster from the neighbouring high grounds than the soft water from the river. To obviate this, Dr. Anderson devised the plan of excavating a filtering bed, three hundred feet long, in the gravel, in the upper end of Friartown Island, which, having a branch of the river flowing on either side, secretes only the water of the Tay, and produces an unlimited quantity of this indispensable element—pure, soft, and limpid at all times and seasons; this is conveyed to the reservoir by means of a suction pipe of great power, below the bed of the principal branch of the river, and thrown up into the tank by two beautiful steam engines, each of ten horses power. The project has been crowned with such complete success that works upon the same principle are carried into effect in Berlin and Paris. The expense of this noble work is defrayed by an assessment on real rents above a certain amount, while the poor are supplied gratis. The public baths were erected by subscription in 1846, at a cost of £1,300, and every description of bath may be used at a very low charge. Opposite the North Inch, and fronting the Tay, is an elegant row of houses called Rose-terrace; in the centre are erected the Public Seminaries (noticed hereafter). At the south end of Rose-terrace is a handsome range of houses forming a crescent. The range of villas on St. Leonard's Bank, skirting the western boundary of the South Inch, at the summit of a gentle elevation, is particularly striking. In addition to these, the whole of the tasteful erections in King-street and King's-place, Kinnoull-street, Athole-street, Charlotte-place, and Barossa-place, have arisen within thirty-five years. Adjoining the North Inch is a bridge which crosses the Tay; this fine structure, elegant, though unadorned, is built in a most substantial manner, but its narrowness admits of a foot path on one side only. Immediately adjoining the bridge is the village of Bridge End, leading to Kinnoull Hill, whose summit, at the distance of a mile and a half, can be most agreeably ascended by Montague-walk, winding through a wood about one half the distance; the precipice of Kinnoull is above six hundred feet perpendicular, and affords an enchanting prospect. The noble river that flows along the base of this tower. ing cliff, the hills and more concentrated objects in the foreground, and the grandeur of the mountainous prospective, present a panorama that is rarely excelled. Near the eastern declivity of this remarkable cliff stands the beautiful castle of Kinfauns, in the centre of the delightful demesne of the same name, so richly embellished by the late Lord Gray. On the eastern bank of the river, about two miles above Perth, stands Scone Palace; the original edifice of such historical notoriety, has been replaced by a magnificent pile of building; it is surrounded by extensive pleasure grounds, highly embellished by wood and water. At a short distance from the palace is the chapel, also rebuilt; it is environed by majestic trees, which gives it an air of pleasing solemnity. Before the reign of King James, the coronation of the kings of Scotland was solemnised in the palace of Scone. The Earl of Mansfield is hereditary keeper of this palace, and proprietor of the spacious park and grounds that surround it. The noble family reside here for nearly six months in the year.

The public buildings in Perth, especially those of late erection, display much taste and spirit. The most prominent is the county rooms. This structure, completed after a design by Mr. Smirke, is situated at the extreme end of South-street, on the benks of the Tay, and forms a noble object when viewed from the opposite side of the river. The front, which faces the water, is embellished by an elegant portico in the centre, and twelve massive fluted columns, which support a beautiful pediment. From the entrance hall a passage leads off to the county hall, which is a noble room, 68 by 40 feet, and occupies the south wing; the centre contains the spacious justiciary hall of semicircular form, and a gallery which will hold 1,000 persons. The remainder of the building, on the same floor, includes the sheriff's court and room, his clerk's office, and an arched fire-proof room where the records of the town are deposited: above is a capacious ball and card room, &c. This building having been found to afford insufficient accommodation, a new and plainer structure is (1866) in course of being erected, on the opposite side of South-street, to which some of the offices will be transferred. Directly in the rear of these buildings is situated the gaol, divided into two prisons—the northern side for felons, and the other for debtors. From the gaoler's house, fronting the interior of the entrance gate, a subterraneous passage leads to the prisoner's bar in the justice hall. The city hall, at the west end of Saint John's Church, erected by the town council, is one of the most capacious public rooms in Scotland—seating 1,800 persons. It is open for public meetings upon the payment of moderate fees.

MANUFACTURES, &c.—There are several manufactories for various fabrics of cotton and linen, hosiery, &c. Dyeing, brewing, tanning, iron founding, and rope and sail making, and other branches of industry and skill, whilst the coal, corn and timber trades employ aggregately a considerable capital. The city possesses extensive railway communication, by means of the lines of the Caledonian, North British, Scottish North-Eastern, Dundee, Perth and Aberdeen, the Highland Railway, and the Perth and Almond Valley Railway. There are seven banking establishments settled in Perth, exclusive of one for savings. The Central Bank of Scotland and the Bank of Scotland both occupy very ornamental buildings in Saint John-street. The hotels here are of a highly respectable character. The 'Royal George Hotel,' in George-street; the 'Salutation,' in South-street; the 'Temperance,' in Saint John-street; the 'King's Arms,' in High-street; the 'Star,' in Canal-street; the 'Exchange,' in George-street; and 'Pople's British,' (first house from the railway terminus), are all comfortable and well conducted. Vessels of 200 tons burthen, owing to skilful dredging, can deliver and receive carriages at the harbour; and steam boats pass regularly between Perth and Dundee. The number of vessels belonging to the port is 58: the total burthen, perhaps, between 6,000 and 7,000 tons.

The government of the city is vested in a lord provost (who is also a sheriff and coroner), four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors: the council thus consists of twenty-six members—all of whom (with the exception of the dean of guild) are, since the passing of the Burgh Reform Bill, in 1832, elected by the suffrages of the £10 constituency of the four elective wards. The dean of guild is a member of council ex-officio, and is chosen by the Guildry Incorporation; the lord provost and magistrates are elected by the councillors, and returned from amongst themselves. The public officers of the municipality are two city clerks, a procurator fiscal, and a city chamberlain. The council meets on the first Monday in every month, a sheriff court is held every Tuesday and Friday during session; and two courts, at least, in each vacation. The police of the city are under the charge of a superintendent; and the quiet and good order of the town is materially promoted by the power the magistrates have of summary punishment for petty offences. The police, lighting, cleansing, paving, &c., of the town, are under the charge of the Town Council Commissioners, under the "General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862." Perth was constituted a royal burgh, with a confirmation of all its former privileges, in the year 1210, by William the Lion. James VI. accepted the municipal office of provost the city, and partook, at the Cross, of the festivities which were prepared for that extraordinary occasion.

EDIFICES FOR RELIGION.—The churches in Perth, with some few exceptions, do not display any striking external beauties. St. John's church is a very ancient structure, and supposed to be one of the first churches built of stone in this country; it was originally erected in the form of a cross, and called the Kirk of the Holy Cross of Saint John's Town. Although it has been almost entirely remodelled by alterations at different periods, yet enough of the ancient part remains to testify that it once was a very fine edifice. Some extensive repairs have greatly improved its exterior appearance in later times. On the outside of the tower are affixed a set of musical bells, covered by a kind of portico, and a singularly looking spire surmounts the whole. The great reformer, Knox, thundered forth his declamations from the venerable old pile when denouncing the corruptions of the establishment. At the extremity of High-street, in Methven-street, stands Saint Paul's church, a more modern and not inelegant structure of stone, with a steeple surmounted by a spire. Saint Leonard's church, a very handsome structure, erected in King-street in 1835—the expense being defrayed by joint-stock shares and private subscriptions; it is incorporated with the establishment. The Episcopal or English church, is in Princes-street; it is small, but the interior is neat, and furnished with an excellent organ. St. Ninian's Cathedral, in Athole-street (also Episcopal), was built in 1850, it is in the Scotch middle-pointed style of architecture; only a part of the proposed building is erected, but when completed it will have two towers, and be an ornament to the city. The Free Church have numerous edifices, as have also the different bodies of Presbyterian dissenters; and there is also a Gaelic church. The Baptists have a commodious chapel in South-street, and the Roman Catholics a large one in Melville-street; the latter has a fine organ.

The city of Perth contains several charitable and well supported institutions for the sick and destitute; among these are the County and City Infirmary, King James the Sixth's Hospital, the Lunatic Asylum, the Perth Dispensary, a Society for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, the Destitute Sick Society, &c.; and several male and female schools for the education of poor children, all of which are conducted on the most liberal and enlightened principles. The Infirmary is a commanding structure, situated in the County-place: the first stone was laid by Lord Kinnaird, in 1836: the Marquis of Breadalbane and Dr. Brown, of Perth, left liberal bequests towards this institution, which have been augmented by one from the late Marquis of Breadalbane, of £400; adjoining the Infirmary is the Dispensary. Additional wards for the treatment of infectious diseases were erected in 1865, at a cost of £1,200, defrayed principally by subscription. King James the Sixth's Hospital; this charitable institution was founded by King James the Sixth, in 1569, and charters were granted by that monarch in 1569 and 1587, and confirmed by Acts of Parliament, in 1587 and 1592. "To provide by all honest ways and means an hospital for the poor maimed distressed persons, orphans and fatherless bairns, within our Burgh of Perth," and for the endowment of which he gave all the "lands, biggins, tenements, kirks, orchards, crofts, &c., which pertained to chaplainries, attarages, prebendaries, founded in whatever kirk, chapel, or college within the liberties and privileges of said Burgh of Perth; all the lands, &c., &c., which pertained to the Blackfriars, Greyfriars, and Carmelite monks at the reformation—the profits of the same to be applied, in all time coming, to the hospital and sustenance of the poor." The present hospital house was built in 1750, and maintained within the house about fifty poor persons, but the institution getting into debt, the then managers in 1812, placed all the inmates as out pensioners at £12 yearly; since then, from the great demand made upon the charity, the managers have been under the necessity of dividing these shares. At present (1866) there are on the roll of eleemosinaries 61 pensioners, 14 of which receive weekly-payment calculated at £12 yearly, and 47 in the same way at £6 yearly. The income of the hospital derived from feu duties, house rents, &c. is about £650 per annum, all being distributed in charity as above stated, educating 100 poor children, with donations in money to the other charities in the burgh, and poor and deserving persons. The hospital is, at present occupied as the Female School of Industry, with other educational day schools. The administrators and trustees are the ministers and elders of the Established church in Perth. The Lunatic Asylum building is situated on an eminence of considerable elevation, on the north-west side of the hill of Kinnoull; the order of architecture is in the Grecian Doric—it was originally constructed to contain one hundred patients, the funds for its erection being left by a Mr. Murray, a native of Perth. The accommodation in this asylum is so superior—the management so efficient—the mode of treatment and discipline of the patients so highly approved—and the success attending the exertions of the superintendent, the matron, and the physicians, so strikingly apparent—that the applications for admission, from all parts of the country, became so numerous and urgent, that it was considered necessary, in 1834, to make very extensive additions, on the same plan with the original portion of the work. Some years ago the institution was incorporated by royal charter, under the title of 'James Murray's Royal Lunatic Asylum.' The muificent bequest of the benevolent donor had been sufficient for all the erections, and a considerable sum still remained as an endowment. On the 9th of May, 1837, a large portion of this magnificent structure was accidentally destroyed by fire; it has been wholly re-built.

The poorhouse, an extensive pile of buildings, is situate in Glasgow Road, and was erected by the authorities of the city, at a cost of £8,000. The Antiquarian Museum, which has lately been re-arranged, possesses a considerable collection of valuable coins, medals, and manuscripts, besides a great variety of natural curiosities, amongst which is a cabinet of minerals, containing upwards of twelve hundred choice specimens, tastefully and scientifically arranged. In the centre of Rose-terrace are erected the 'Public Seminaries,' of fine stone, embellished with noble pillars. This institution is established on the most liberal principles; the course of education is completed in two annual sessions of ten months each, the session commencing in October and ending in July; the masters comprehend a rector for mathematics and the higher branches of education, and his assistant, a master for modern languages, one for drawing and painting, and another for practical arithmetic and accounts. Sharp's Educational Institution is in South Methven-street: this large and elegant building, erected by the trustees of the late Mr. John Sharp, baker, Perth, was opened in September, 1860. The institution contains four departments: the Industrial, the Infant, the Junior, and the Senior. The curriculum includes English reading and grammar, writing, arithmetic, geography, mathematics, Latin, music, and drawing. Special attention is given to the industrial training of girls in sewing, knitting, household economy, &c. The elder boys are taught calisthenics and drill. The pupils in the various departments already average 350. A beautiful structure has been erected near the bridge, which forms a handsome termination to George-street; it is dedicated to the memory of the late Thomas Marshall, Esq. of Glenalmond, formerly lord provost; and is a monument evincing esteem for departed worth. The form of this edifice is circular, ornamented with an elegant Ionic portico; the body of the building is surmounted by a dome, and the whole is imitative of the Pantheon at Rome; in the interior are halls for the public library and for the museum of the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth: this structure was raised by private subscription. The Freemasons' Hall is a neat and not inelegant building, in the Parliament-close, High-street; it contains a handsome spacious room, which is principally used as an auction-mart for respectable sales; it was built on the site of the old Parliament House, in the year 1818, and is the property of the Royal Arch Lodge of Freemasons. A statue of the late Prince Consort was erected in 1864, and was inaugurated by Her Majesty in person on the 30th August in that year. The statue is the work of Mr. Brodie, sculptor, Edinburgh, and is much admired. On the Inches many of the citizens ardently engage in athletic sports and exercises, especially cricket, football, and the national game of golf; the Royal Perth Golfing Society includes in its roll of members a great many of the nobility and gentry. The barracks erected in 1795, at the west end of Athole-street, form a handsome building, originally intended to accommodate 200 cavalry, but lately converted to the use of infantry; they will contain a full regiment. The militia barracks are in Canal-street.

The weekly market-day is Friday: the fairs, since the year 1822, have been altered by the magistrates and town council, on account of the general inconvenience resulting from the days formerly appointed falling on the same days, or at the same time, with the fairs of Falkirk and other places; they are now therefore held on the first Fridays in March, April, July and September, on the third Friday in October, the second Friday in December, and a sheep and wool fair the first Tuesday after Inverness wool fair; a cattle market is likewise held on the North Inch, on every Friday, from the third occurrence of that day in December, to the middle of June; and a horse market takes place on the first Friday in May.

KINFAUNS is a parish five miles E. of Perth: its size is about five miles long, by a width of two and a half miles. It is situated on the river Tay, and is a station on the Perth and Dundee line. An Established and a Free church are in the parish.

KINNOULL parish lies with its western extremity to the Tay, opposite Perth, and, extending from thence in an irregular manner for nearly four miles, with a general breadth of one mile. The surface is hilly, but romantic and exceedingly beautiful, being covered to a great extent with fine plantations. From the summit of Kinnoull Hill a beautiful view of the surrounding country may be obtained. Many handsome villas have been erected, within the last few years, on the rising ground to the east of the river, and forming part of the suburb of Kinnoull. The ancient church of the parish was long a rectory, in the proprietary of the monastery of Cambuskenneth, and was dedicated to St Constantine. The modern church is a neat edifice, built on a bank overhanging the Tay, south of the village. Near here once stood the old castle of Kinnoull. Kinnoull has given the title of earl to a branch of the family of Hay of Errol, the first of the title being ennobled in 1627, as Lord Hay of Kinfauns, and elevated to the earldom in 1633, as Earl of Kinnoull, Viscount Dupplin.

PITLOCHRY,

MOULIN, LOGIERAIT, BALLINLUIG, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PITLOCHRY is a thriving village, in the parish of Moulin, 13 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, and about five from Logierait; situated on the banks of the Tummel, and surrounded on all sides by some of the most beautiful and varied scenery found in the highlands of Perthshire. The trade of the village is mainly confined to that of a domestic and retail character—except that the distillation of whisky is carried on somewhat extensively in the village and neighbourhood. The place, too, is of sufficient importance to encourage the establishment of several respectable fire and life agency offices, and three banking concerns—branches, respectively, of the Central Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland; and there is, besides, a Savings' Bank. A justice of peace court sits here once in every third month, and three fairs are held annually—namely, on the Saturday before Amulree in May; on the Friday after Falkirk tryst, in August, for lambs; and on the third Wednesday in October (old style).

MOULIN is a large parish in the Highlands, extending towards Athole. It is intersected by the Briarachan and the Fernet, which unite within the district; and there are several lochs well stocked with trout, particularly Lake Broom. The greater part of the parish is mountaincus, but the vales of the streams are exceedingly beautiful. The village, which is very small, is five miles distant from Logierait; near it stand the ruins of the old castle of Moulin. In this parish is the pass of Killiecrankie, noted for the battle fought there in July, 1689, between King William's troops, commanded by General Mackay, and a body of Highlanders under the Viscount of Dundee. There is a fair held at Moulin annually on the first Tuesday in March.

LOGIERAIT is a parish in the northern part of the county—the village is 8 miles N. from Dunkeld, and the like distance east from Aberfeldy. It is noted for the distillation of whisky, in which branch there are several establishments in the village and its neighbourhood. The principal part of the parish lies on the point of land formed by the junction of the Tay and the Tummel, extending along the banks of each seven miles. Not far from the church is an eminence, which commands a prospect of the greater part of the parish, which, including the windings of the rivers, the vales and pastures, with the woodlands, in some places extending to the rivers' banks, and the distant mountains, form together one of the richest landscapes that can be imagined. A new Combination Poorhouse was erected in 1864 for the accommodation of 117 inmates from Logierait and ten adjoining parishes. A chain boat commenced crossing the Tay at Logierait in August, 1824, for the accommodation of both foot and horse passengers. A coach and four may go into this conveyance without taking the horses from the carriage. It was at Logierait that Prince Charles kept his prisoners after the battle of Prestonpans.

BALLINLUIG is a small village in the parish of Logierait, situated about half way between Dunkeld and Pittochry. Here is a Baptist Chapel, an excellent school, and a station on the Highland Railway, which is also the junction for Aberfeldy.

SCONE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF BALBEGGIE, CARGILL, COLLACE, GUILDTOWN, KINROSSIE AND ST. MARTINS.

SCONE is a parish lying on the left bank of the Tay, opposite the parishes of Redgorton and Perth—the village, sometimes called NEW SCONE, is about two miles N.E. from Perth, and with the palace, occupies a retiring part of the grounds which rise from the Tay, and commands an outlook upon the river and the vale of Perth. This place is worthy of notice principally on account of its ancient palace, for ages the residence of the early Scottish monarchs, the palace of their coronation, and the scene of many important and brilliant events. In this vicinage formerly stood an abbey also, founded by Alexander I., in the year 1114. Some historians have described Scone as the ancient capital of the Picts; it certainly, however, was the chief seat of Scottish royalty as far back as the time of Kenneth II. In the church of theabbey just mentioned was preserved the famous stone (brought from Ireland, according to some writers, by Fergus I.), which was used as the coronation seat, and upon which all the successive Scottish kings were crowned till the calamitous days of John Baliol, when Edward I. carried it to England, where it continues to form one of the appendages to regality in Westminster Abbey; the last monarch crowned at Scone was Charles II., January 1st, 1651, when on his expedition into this kingdom. On the site of the ancient palace an elegant new edifice has been raised, as a seat of the Earl of Mansfield—pleasantly seated on an extensive lawn sloping gently to the Tay, and surrounded by large and umbrageous plantations. In this modern mansion much of the antique furniture has, with judicious taste, been preserved, in particular, a bed that belonged to James VI., and another, the hangings of which were wrought by the fair hands of Queen Mary, when a prisoner at Lochleven; the music gallery occupies the same site as the noble hall in which the coronations were performed; the large gallery, intended for the reception of a collection of valuable paintings, is one hundred and eighty feet long. About fifty yards from the house is an aisle of the old abbey of Scone; it contains a magnificent marble monument to a Viscount Stormont, who died upwards of two centuries ago. At a little distance further stands the old market cross of Scone, surrounded by a wilderness of pleasure grounds, which have usurped the station of the ancient village; it has been aptly observed, that 'there are many instances of towns losing their market crosses, but this is the only cross which has lost its town.'

THORNHILL,

OR THORNHILL IN MENTEITH, is a village in the parish of Kincardine, 45 miles W. by N. from Edinburgh, 39 S. W. from Perth, 5 S. from Callander, four from Doune, and four from Kippen. It consists chiefly of one street, extending nearly half a mile in length. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture, and a few in weaving. There are the usual domestic trades found in a country village, also a tannery. Two churches of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship; and the schools are a Parochial and an Assembly, and one maintained by subscription.

The parish lies in the southern quarter of the county in the strath of Menteith; it is triangular in figure, one side of which is twelve miles in length, another sixteen, and a third about seven; altogether it contains a superfices of six thousand acres. A large portion of the parish was formerly covered with moss, but, with the exception of about five hundred acres, it is now entirely free. Adjacent to the Teith, and on the road from Stirling to Doune, is the highly ornamented and improved estate of Blair Drummond, upon which operations of great magnitude have been successfully carried on, in reducing the quantity of superincumbent moss, from which the estate is now said to be entirely free.

POST OFFICE, THORNHILL, Alexander Sands, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Stirling) at half past two morning, and are despatched thereto at five evening.

The nearest Money Order Offices are KIPPEN and DOUNE, each four miles distant from Thornhill.

WEEM AND DULL, WITH ABERFELDY.

WEEM is an extensive Highland parish in the district of Breadalbane; it is so mixed up with and intersected by neighbouring parishes, that no accurate idea can be given of its extent and boundaries. The surface is mountainous and rugged; it is watered by the rivers Tay, Lyon, Lochy, and Dochart. The church of Weem is 74 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh, 34 N.W. from Perth, and 9 W. from Logierait. Near the church is Castle Menzies, the seat of Sir Robert Menzies, Bart.; a handsome building with lofty turrets, surrounded by fine plantations, pleasure grounds, and orchards—a spot presenting a refreshing contrast to many other parts of the district. Near the Castle is the Weem Hotel, of which Mr. Macdonald is the proprietor; it is an establishment admirably conducted for the reception of families and other visitors; it is sheltered from the north winds, and is placed in the midst of the delightful and interesting scenery with which this locality so richly abounds. DULL is also a large parish, and assimilated in its localities with Weem, so that a just estimate of its extent cannot be arrived at; it comprehends, however, a general length of thirty miles, by a breadth of about twelve; the river Tummel bounds the district on the north-east, and the Lyon and Tay on the south, which rivers produce excellent salmon; and the lakes (of which there are fifteen, of large and small dimensions), abound with fine trout, pike, and eel. The military road from Stirling to Inverness passes through the entire length of the parish. The church stands at Appin, about two miles and a half from Weem. The lofty mountain Schiallion, which rises upwards of three thousand five hundred feet, is seen on the northern border, with its brow shrouded in mist. The village of Dull is situated close to the Castle of Menzies before mentioned, and contains the Parish church and school.

ABERFELDY is a thriving and neat village, partly in the parish of Dull, and partly in that of Logierait, 18 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, 9 W. from Logierait, and 6 N.E. from Kenmore; situated on the south bank of the beautiful Tay, on the great Highland road, which crosses the river by a bridge, elegant and substantial, of five arches, constructed by the celebrated General Wade. This part of the county is justly recognised as the centre of the most beautiful scenes on the Tay: these comprise mountain, dale, and wood, and the locality is likewise attractive from its proximity to the romantic falls of Moness. The village contains several establishments of business importance—these include branches of the Central Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland, a woollen manufactory, a first-class hotel, of which Mr. Mackenzie is the enterprising proprietor, well known for its excellent arrangements; and a large, handsome, and admirably-conducted academy, in connection with the Free church. A sheriff small debt court is held here three times a year, in which claims are settled to any amount not exceeding £8 6s. 8d. The Ballinluig and Aberfeldy branch of the Highland Railway terminates here. Fairs are held on the first Thursday in January (old style), on the Tuesday before Kenmore March fair; on the first Tuesday in April (old style), for horses and cattle; in May for cattle and sheep; on the Saturday next before Amulree fair; on the first Friday in August (old style), and on the last Thursday in October (old style), for cattle and sheep.

RENFREWSHIRE.

THIS county, of great importance as connected with the manufactures of North Britain, is bounded on the south by Ayrshire, and on the east and north-east by Lanarkshire; the Clyde river and Firth separate it from the county of Dumbarton on the north, and the Firth of Clyde divides it from Argyleshire on the west. In figure it is nearly triangular—measuring from north-west to south-east about thirty miles, and varying in breadth from ten to fifteen miles: altogether the county is estimated to contain about one hundred and fifty-four thousand English acres.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion this district was inhabited by the Damnii, a British tribe who also occupied the adjacent vale of Strathclyde; the invaders concentrated themselves at a spot near the present site of Paisley, to which they gave the name Vanduaria. In after times the Romanised inhabitants were subjected to the sway of the Scots, and in 1097 submitted to the silent revolution which took place under Edgar, when the Celtic customs were changed for the muncipal laws which the Scoto-Saxon government gradually introduced. In the reign of David I, Walter, the son of Alan, fled from Shropshire during the troublous conflicts of Maud and Stephen, and settled in the district, where David I made him stewart, and gave him lands to support the dignity of his office. Besides these possessions, he subsequently acquired the whole district of Strathgryfe, and the western half of Kyle, in Ayrshire, which hence was called Kyle Stewart. Such was the manner in which the first of the royal family of Stewart settled in Scotland. At this period the country in this quarter was in a semi-barbarous state, but Walter, the Stewart, introduced new and civilised usages. He settled many of his military followers on his lands, and by founding the abbey of Paisley, introduced a body of instructed men, who taught the ancient people domestic arts and foreign manners. For several centuries this district formed a portion of Lanarkshire: in 1404 Robert III created a principality, consisting of the barony of Renfrew and the whole of the Stewarts' estates, with the earldom of Carrick and the barony of King's Kyle—all of which he granted, in a free regality, as a provision for his son James; and this principality continued, in after times, the appropriate appanage of the eldest sons of the Scottish monarchs; in consequence of these arrangements, the indentity of the barony of Renfrew and the shire of Lanark was dissolved, and the former placed under the jurisdiction of a separate sheriff.

SOIL, PRODUCE, AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil of the county is very much diversified. In those parts of the high grounds which are not covered by heath and moss, a fine light soil on a gravelly bottom is generally found; in the portion formed of detached hills, the surface is a thin earth, based on gravel; and in the level district, the plough or spade sinks through a deep, rich, brown loam. More than one-half of the shire, comprehending the west and south-east portions, is hilly, and devoted to pasture; the cultivated districts comprise the north, the north-east, and the centre of the county, and consist partly of low distinct elevations, and partly of a level tract of rich loam between Paisley and the river Clyde. The hilly part of the county varies in elevation from five hundred to six hundred feet; the hill of greatest altitude in the shire is about twelve hundred and forty feet high. Owing to the great demand in this county for dairy produce, and that also of the garden and the fold (arising from the vicinity of large and populous towns), nearly two-thirds of the arable land in the shire is kept under grasses; and hence the county of Renfrew enjoys but little celebrity as an agricultural district. The Minerals of this shire are of very considerable value—coal, limestone, and sandstone abounding in various parts of it: the most extensive coal-works are those of Quarrelton, near the centre of the county—Polmadie, on its north-east boundary—and at Hurlet and Househill, to the south-east of Paisley. As many as eight or nine different lime quarries have been wrought at the same time in Renfrewshire. Ironstone accompanies all the coal strata, and is particularly embodied in the composition of the shores of the Clyde. In point of commercial and manufacturing importance, this county is second only to that of Lanark, and with it unites in constituting the great manufacturing district of Scotland. The Manufactures are chiefly cotton and silk goods, including, amongst various articles and fabrics, shawls of infinite diversity in texture and price. Whilst Paisley is the head-quarters of the trade in these articles, the business of weaving is pursued, to a greater or less extent, in almost every town, village, and hamlet. The free export of the manufactured goods is promoted by the different sea-ports on the Clyde, especially Greenock—by which, also, foreign produce is imported; the trade is further assisted by the Forth and Clyde Canal, which connects the county with many other shires.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The waters of Renfrewshire are of no great magnitude in themselves, but by the industry and enterprise of the inhabitants of the district they are rendered of material importance to society. The principal streams are the White Cart, the Black Cart, and the Gryfe; all of which ultimately unite, and fall into the Clyde below Inchinnan-bridge—that is, about half-way down the river between Glasgow and Port Glasgow. The White Cart (which, by way of superdistinction, is generally denominated the Cart), has its creative springs at Eaglesham, in this county, and in the high grounds of East Kilbride, in Lanarkshire; and, passing Paisley in its course, joins the Gryfe at the bridge above named. The Black Cart issues from the beautiful Loch of Castle Semple, in Lochwinnoch parish, and, descending northward, falls in with the Gryfe at Walkinshaw. The Gryfe rises in the high grounds above Largs, and flows eastward until it meets the Black Cart; the Gryfe bestows the name of Strathgryfe upon the vale through which it flows. The lakes are Castle Semple Loch, Queenside Loch (in the parish of Lochwinnoch), two lochs in Neilston parish, and several smaller ones. The first named (Castle Semple) is situate in the southern border of the county; its banks are beautifully wooded in some places; and it contains a small island, on which stand the ruins of a castle. This county enjoys the benefit of railway transit, being intersected by the Glasgow and Barrhead and the Greenock sections of the Caledonian Railway; the Glasgow and South-Western line; the Glasgow and Paisley Joint line; and the Paisley and Renfrew line.

Renfrewshire comprehends fifteen entire parishes and four parts of parishes; it contains two representative burghs, Port Glasgow and Renfrew, which join with Rutherglen, Dumbarton, and Kilmarnock in returning one member to parliament; and Paisley and the county send each a representative.

BARRHEAD,

NEILSTON, HURLET, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BARRHEAD is a rapidly increasing village in the parish of Neilston, county of Renfrewshire, four miles from Paisley and seven from Glasgow. The town, or village, consists chiefly of one principal street, with several smaller ones diverging from it, and together with a suburb called GRAHAMSTON, which is connected by a bridge over the river Levern, is the centre of a manufacturing and thicky-populated neighbourhood. The trade and manufactures of the district are very considerable, consisting of several large bleach fields, a number of extensive calico and shawl printing establishments, cotton and flax spinning, power-loom weaving, besides collieries and two engineering and ironfoundry works. These, altogether, give employment to a vast number of both sexes, and contribute materially to the prosperity of the place. In the village there are also three banking establishments, several respectable shops, and a gas works. A justice of the peace court is held on the first Monday in each month. Crofthead being the terminus of the Glasgow and Barrhead section of the Caledonian Railway, easy communication is afforded with other important towns. The station, a handsome one, is situated close to the town.

The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, an United Presbyterian church, an Evangelical Union chapel, and one for Roman Catholics. There are several excellent schools in connection with the various places of worship, besides one or two private academies. There is also a Mechanics' Institute, with an extensive library attached.

NEILSTON is a village in the parish of its name, 9 miles S.W. from Glasgow, the like distance N.E. from Stewarton, 5 from Paisley, and one from Barrhead. eligibly situate on the river Levern, on the road to Irvine, in the midst of a well-cultivated and thriving neighbourhood. In the centre of the village stands the parochial church, surmounted by a handsome steeple and clock. The situation of the village is healthy, and is within ten minutes' walk of Crofthead and the terminus of the Glasgow and Barrhead Railway. In the vicinity are several bleach fields and print works; and branches of the Union Bank of Scotland, and the Clydesdale Banking Co., afford suitable monetary accommodation. There is a good school, in which is taught the various branches of a useful education. The inhabitants also support several institutions and societies of a charitable, friendly, and educational character; there is also a Mechanics' Institute, and an Agricultural Society. The parish extends eight miles in length by from two to four in breadth. From the summit of a ridge of hills, which extends through the entire length of the parish, the prospect is grand and comprehensive, and several plantations add materially to the beauty of the scene. There are two small lakes, called Loch Lebo and Loch Long. From the former issues the Lugton, a tributary stream of the Garnock; and the latter discharges itself by the Levern, which runs north east to join the Cart. Fairs for cattle are held on the third Tuesdays in February, May, and October (old style).

One mile from Barrhead, on the Paisley road, is the small village of HURLET, where are large chemical and an extensive colliery works.

CATHCART, CROSSMYLOOF, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CATHCART is a pleasant village in the parish of that name, party in the county of Lanark, but chiefly in that of Renfrew, distant from Glasgow two miles. Its original designation was Cuer-Cart, i.e. the Castle on the river Cart. The parish is of considerable extent, and contains above 3,000 acres, almost wholly arable. In it are paper, pasteboard, and snuff mills. The surface of the land is agreeably diversified with hills and dales, and presents, in many situations, great picturesque beauty; many handsome villas, have lately been erected. Agriculture is the occupation of a great proportion of the inhabitants; the very summits of the hills are ploughed and cultivated. The parish church which is in the Gothic style of architecture, will accommodate 850 persons, and a Free church, recently erected by the members of that denomination, has accommodation for about 650. There are also two schools, a Parochial and Subscription in the parish. The field of Langside, inthis parish, is remarkable for being the scene of the last fruitless effort of the unfortunate Mary, to regain her crown. An eminence is still pointed out where the queen stood during the engagement. The old castle of Cathcart, above alluded to, is a very conspicuous ruin, placed in a commanding situation, with two sides defended by the Cart, to which there is almost perpendicular descent of a tremendous depth. It belonged to the Lords of Cathcart, and has been dismantled over a century.

CROSSMYLOOF is a finely situated little hamlet, composed principally of plain houses ranged on both sides of the highway, about two miles south from Glasgow, commanding a wide spreading prospect of the surrounding country, studded with towns, villages, and mansions, and bounded at the extreme distance by the misty Pentlands. The United Presbyterians have a place of worship here. An extensive baking establishment was erected in 1847 by the late Mr Thompson of Camphill, for the purpose of supplying the city of Glasgow with bread. There is also a small iron forge in the village.

POST OFFICE, CATHCART, John Murdoch, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Glasgow) at ten minutes past seven morning and at a quarter-past five evening, and are despatched thereto at a quarter-past nine morning and a quarter past five evening.

Post Receiving House, CROSSMYLOOF, Janet Rhind, Receiver.—Letters are despatched (via Glasgow) at thirty five minutes past ten morning, and five minutes past six evening.

EAGLESHAM

IS a neat modern village, 10 miles S.W. from Glasgow and 11 S. from Paisley, pleasantly situated in the lower part of the parish to which it has given its name, about a mile to the north-west of the old castle of Polnoon; it is composed of two rows of houses; a tributary rivulet to the Cart running through the intermediate space. The old village was demolished in 1769, and was shortly afterwards rebuilt under the direction of the former Earl of Eglintoun, who also, in 1790 erected a church, of octagonal form, with an elegant steeple, furnished with a good clock and a fine toned bell; there is likewise a Free Church, and chapels for United and Reformed Presbyterians and Roman Catholics. The barony of Eaglesham, and the patronage of the church was in the Earl of Eglintoun's family, since the year 1250, but has passed into that of Allan Gilmour, Esq. Two cotton mills give employment to the industrious classes, and there is a grain mill. Fairs are held on the third Thursdays in May and August (old style).

GOUROCK AND ASHTON.

GOUROCK is a small sea-port town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Inverkip, three miles W. from Greenock, beautifully situated along the south side of a fine bay on the river Clyde. The haven is favoured with excellent anchorage ground, and vessels to and from Glasgow, Port Glasgow, and Greenock frequently take refuge here in contrary winds: a small but commodious quay was constructed, at the cost of about £5,000, which has nine feet depth at low water—an advantage possessed by no other on the Clyde. The town, which is upwards of a mile in length, has become a fashionable resort in the summer months, of families from Glasgow and other places, to enjoy the pleasure and benefit of sea-bathing. It is said that this port was the first place in Great Britain were red herrings were prepared. The lands of Gourock were incorporated into a burgh of barony by a charter from William and Mary, dated the 24th of April, 1694, with very extensive powers, and among other privileges, gives authority to hold a weekly market and two annual fairs, but the successive proprietors have never yet thought proper to avail themselves of this privilege; the present proprietor is Major Darroch.

A neat chapel was built in the year 1773; from the increase of inhabitants, and the influx of casual visitors in the summer, it has long been too small for their accommodation: to obviate this inconvenience, a very commodious and well finished place of worship, with a handsome tower and clock, was erected in 1832. A Free Church, an United Presbyterian Chapel, and a Scottish Episcopal Church, are the other places of worship. An excellent school room was built by the heritors of the parish in 1817, and endowed by them with the one-half of the maximum salary allowed by the act of parliament. There is a school in connection with the Free Church, also a school of Industry, which is managed by a committee of ladies.

GREENOCK,

THE first seaport in Scotland is 22 miles from Glasgow, 15 from Paisley, and 66 from Edinburgh; situated on the south bank of the river Clyde, and connected with Glasgow by means of the Glasgow, Greenock, and Paisley Railway. The site of this town is unrivalled for the command of grand and picturesque scenery, combining water, wood, and mountains; among the latter is seen the majestic Ben Lomond, whilst others of less magnitude serve to render more obvious its immense and towering elevation. In the early part of the eighteenth century Greenock was a small village, inhabited chiefly by fishermen, and without quay or harbour; it now, however, possesses its harbours, which, having been improved at a considerable expense, are most commodious and very capacious; they extend nearly 3,000 feet from east to west, and are of sufficient depth to float vessels of great burthen; in the roads there is good anchorage for ships of the largest class. The quays are spacious, and have well-constructed sheds, supported by iron pillars, for the security of merchandise against the weather; there are also good graving and other docks, capable of receiving vessels of any size. The area of the water inside the Victoria Harbour is somewhat over six acres, and the works were erected at a cost of about £120,000; besides these other new and extensive docks, which the steadily increasing trade of the town and the river traffic make imperatively necessary, are in course of construction. It is one of the finest tidal harbours in the kingdom, and is particularly well suited for vessels of large tonnage, being sixteen feet deep at neap tides, and fourteen at spring tides. At this harbour is a crane capable of lifting seventy tons, so that steamers of the largest class may have their engines fitted at this port without taking the ground. The streets of Greenock have been greatly improved, a large sum having been expended in sanitary arrangements; and within a recent period a number of very clean, regular, and even elegant streets have been erected towards the west, for the accommodation of the more wealthy portion of the inhabitants; a tendency has likewise been displayed by this class of society to rear streets and detached villas along the heights behind the town, where the view of the Firth and of the Highland scenery beyond is a source of unfailing pleasure. The thoroughfares and principal shops are lighted with gas, supplied from works erected in 1828. The markets for meat, fish and vegetables are convenient, and generally well supplied. Among the public edifices of this town, the Custom-house decidedly ranks first; it is truly a grand national structure. The selection of its situation is also most appropriate; the grand front faces the water, leaving a fine open space from the edge of the quay. The building is of Grecian architecture; in it the business of both customs and inland revenue is transacted. The entrance to the former is at the north front, facing the river, and that of the latter at the east front. Both fronts are ornamented by four elegant lofty Doric pillars, supporting a handsome pediment. This fine edifice was erected under the direction of Mr. Burn, of Edinburgh, who was the architect also of the Assembly-rooms, situated in Cathcart-street, which he completed in the same elegant order and style. There is a commercial newsroom in Cathcart square which is well supplied with the various journals and magazines. Greenock is the birthplace of the illustrious Watt, the perfector of the steam engine, who was born in 1736; in commemoration of this circumstance his son has erected a building in Union-street, called the Watt Institution, for the purpose of a library, upon ground given by the late Sir Michael Shaw Stewart, Bart.; the building is from a design by Mr. Blore, architect, of London, and cost £3,000; a statue of the deceased engineer, from the chisel of the celebrated Chantrey, is placed within the entrance of the edifice: £2,000 was the sum paid for the execution of this appropriate ornament, which was raised by subscription. Besides this library the town has two or three good circulating libraries.

Among the most important branches under the head of, or connected with, manufactures, are several shipbuilding establishments, the yards of two of which are so complete as to rank second only to those belonging to the Crown; there are also several extensive engine works and iron foundries; two breweries, four ropewalks, four tan yards, and several extensive sugar refineries; manufactories for woollen and sail-cloth; a distillery, and large mills for spinning wool, cotton, and flax, and for making paper; but in nothing is Greenock more celebrated than in the building and fitting-up of steam vessels—furnishing them not only for London, Bristol, Liverpool and Dublin, but also for the Mediterranean, Portugal, Spain, South America, and New South Wales. Most of the fine steamers belonging to the Cunard American line have been built here. Greenock being the first seaport town in North Britain, its mercantile and shipping trade extends to very considerable importations of rum, sugar, molasses, mahogany, &c. from the West Indies; ice, potash, timber, &c. and naval stores from America; and wine, fruit, &c. from Portugal: many ships are likewise employed from hence in the trade of the Baltic, and also in the fisheries of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Since the opening of commercial intercourse with India and China, the merchants of this place have prosecuted the trade to those countries with great spirit and commensurate success—the Clyde ships, from the superiority of their construction, never failing to secure a preference of engagements. Greenock derives vast advantage from the application of steam to navigation, there being a great number of vessels propelled by this powerful auxiliary constantly traversing the Clyde, to and from Glasgow, and the intermediate places on the banks of the river, where they make stoppages for the convenience of passengers; large and elegant steamboats also leave this port for Liverpool, Dublin, Belfast, Londonderry, Campbelton, Ayr, Inverness, and other intermediate places in the Highlands, at stated periods: indeed no town in the kingdom affords greater facility to travellers, by this mode of conveyance, than Greenock. The steamers carrying the Irish mail are now despatched from this port.

In all probability this thriving seat of commerce will at no distant period, become the station of some considerable cotton factories, and participate with Glasgow and Paisley in the extensive trade enjoyed by those places, there being in the neighbourhood of the town the greatest amount of water power to be found in the kingdom; this is derived from an extensive breakwater having been thrown across a valley, in the bottom of which a stream of water flowed, now forming a condensed body of that element two miles long and half a mile wide, having a depth of sixty feet, and at an elevation of five hundred feet above the level of the sea, it furnishes sites for a large number of mills, with power to any extent that may be required; it is also rendered subservient to the supply of the town with water for domestic purposes, a necessary with which it was formerly but ill provided. This splendid work, which is calculated to impress the stranger with a high sense of the character of the inhabitants of Greenock, was completed in 1827, by a company, under the title of Shaw's Water Company. There are in the town six banking establishments, viz. branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, the Clydesdale Bank, the National Bank of Scotland, the City of Glasgow Bank, the British Linen Company's Bank, and the Provident Savings' Bank. The municipal government of Greenock is vested in a provost, four bailies, a town treasurer, and sixteen councillors, who have the power of making laws for the advantage of the burgh, and of maintaining peace and order within its limits. The police is under the most efficient regulation, both that of the town and that of the harbour; the management of the latter is confided to its commissioners (along with the town council), who are elected annually. The town has its gaol and bridewell, which were erected in the year 1810. The burgh sends one member to parliament.

Greenock comprehends three parishes, respectively the 'West parish,' the 'Mid parish,' and the 'East parish'—all being erected out of, and separated from, the original parish of Innerkip. The first, which may be styled the mother parish of the three, includes the western part of the town, and the greater proportion of the country district. The church is a modern and elegant structure, situated in Nelson-street, the original church, which was for some time in ruins, has been repaired, and stands near the shore, surrounded by an old burying ground, which is interesting from being the resting place of Burns's 'Highland Mary,' and to mark which some years since a monument was erected. The mid parish comprehends the central parts of the town; the church is situated in a small square, fronting along a street which descends to the quay; this is an elegant structure with a lofty steeple (the site extremely well selected to render it an ornament to the town), and forms a highly interesting object in the prospect from the river. The east parish possesses a place of worship near Rue-end; it was erected in 1774, as a chapel of Ease. Besides the churches and chapels under the Establishment, there are places of worship for various sects of dissenters, the Episcopalians, and Roman Catholics; some of these are embellishments to the town, and highly creditable to those under whose direction and superintendence they have been founded and raised—(a list of all, and where they are situated, with the names of the respective ministers, appears under an appropriate head in a subsequent page). The inhabitants of Greenock are by no means indifferent to the pursuits of literature and science; the libraries and reading-rooms have been briefly noticed; the denizens can boast an excellent academy, several Parochial and other schools; and the Highlanders' Society have constructed handsome buildings for schools in Roxburgh-street. Three newspapers are published here—The 'Greenock Advertiser,' the 'Greenock Herald,' and the 'Greenock Telegraph and Clyde Shipping Gazette.' There are several charitable institutions, the finest among which, as a building, is Sir Gabriel Wood's Mariners' Asylum, an institution founded by the late Sir Gabriel Wood, for the relief and comfort of aged and decayed master mariners and merchant seamen. The Infirmary, erected in 1809, is now (1866) being considerably enlarged, it is ornamental as a public edifice, and its utility is universally acknowledged. A Ragged School was established here in 1849, and proves a most suitable provision for the neglected youth. A Sailors' Home, on the same principle as those of Dublin and Liverpool, is established.

About a mile from Greenock, close to the banks of the Clyde, is a battery mounting fourteen guns; but there are no barracks, and it is seldom that any soldiers are quartered in the town. There are several very agreeable bathing villages in the vicinity; one of these forms a very pleasing and picturesque object from the quays—being seated under the mountains on the opposite side of the frith, which is six or seven miles across: several steamboats go to and from the different villages during the bathing season. The weekly market is held on Friday; and there are two annual fairs—one takes place on the first Thursday of July, the other on the fourth Tuesday of November, and horse and cattle markets twice a year—on the Friday before Glasgow Whit-Monday fair, and on the Friday immediately preceding Kilbarchan fair.

HOUSTOUN,

BRIDGE OF WEIR, CROSSLEE, ERSKINE, BISHOPTON AND LANGBANK.

HOUSTOUN is a village, or small town, in the united parish of Houstoun and Kilallan; 14 miles from Glasgow, 7 from Paisley, the like distance from Port Glasgow, and 3½ miles from the Houston station, on Greenock Section of the Caledonian Line, pleasantly situated on both sides the Houstoun burn. It consists of two long streets, one on each side of the rivulet; the inhabitants are chiefly employed in weaving and embroidering. At the east end of the village is a small Parish Church; there is also a Free Church, and a Roman Catholic Chapel. It is said that the town is partly built of the stones that once composed the Castle of Houstoun, which formerly stood in this neighbourhood, to the east—an ancient mansion, the residence of the knights of Houstoun, demolished in 1780 by a proprietor of the estate.

About one mile from Houstoun, and three from Johnstone [a station on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway] most delightfully and romantically situated in a valley, is WEIR BRIDGE, more familiarly known by the name of the 'Bridge of Weir.' It is the boundary of the parish in this quarter, being divided from the parish of Kilbarchan by the river Gryffe; on this stream are three cotton mills, in which are employed a considerable number of the industrious classes.

About one mile hence is CROSSLEE, once participating in the prosperity enjoyed by different places in this parish, as the seat of manufactures, but now almost deserted, owing to the destruction by fire of a large cotton mill, in which many hands were employed. The united parish is about six miles in length by three in breadth; the low grounds are in general fertile, and beautified by some fine natural tracts of wood.

The parish of ERSKINE is six miles in length, and from three to four in breadth; situate on the Clyde, opposite to Kilpatrick. The ground rises gently from the margin of the river, and is laid out in rich plantations, orchards, and corn fields. Erskine House, the seat of Lord Blantyre, is a beautiful mansion, seated amidst tastful pleasure grounds facing the Clyde. The Glasgow and Greenock Section of the Caledonian Railway passes through the parish. Erskine, it is said, is the oldest ferry on the Clyde; there is a neat and comfortable inn at this place.

BISHOPTON is a small village in Erskine parish, on the Glasgow and Greenock road, 12 miles W.S.W. from the former place, and 10½ E.S.E. from the latter. There is a place of worship belonging to the Free Church. Brick making is carried on to some extent, and may be said to constitute the only approach to manufacturing in the village. The Greenock Section of the Caledonian line passes near to the village, for which it has a station.

LANGBANK is another small village in the same parish as Bishopton, from which place it is distant 3¾ miles. There is a station on the Greenock Section of Caledonian Railway here.

INNERKIP OR INVERKIP,

WEMYSS BAY, SKELMORLIE (AYRSHIRE) AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

INNERKIP is a village in the parish of its name, six miles S. W. from Greenock: situated on the Kipp water, which intersects the district from east to west, and falls into the Clyde. The village is sometimes called the 'Auld Kirk,' but is more commonly termed Inverkip—the latter appellation being derived from its being seated at the mouth of the Kipp water. The Daff, and some other rivulets, likewise irrigate the district; in their courses they are broken into small cascades, which produce a pleasing effect; and the meadows through which they pass are finely embanked. Ardgowan House, the seat of Sir Michael Robert Shaw Stewart, Bart. is pleasantly situated on a kind of peninsula, a little north of the village; it is a fine modern building, surrounded with beautiful and romantic pleasure grounds. Besides the Parish church, which is a neat and handsome edifice, surmounted by a spire with a clock, there is a Free church, a chapel for Independents, and one for Episcopalians; connected with the Established and Free churches are two excellent schools. Communication with other towns is rendered easy by means of the steamers plying daily on the river, and also by the Wemyss Bay Section of the Caledonian Railway, which has a station here

WEMYSS BAY is two miles from Innerkip, and is beautifully situated on the banks of the Clyde. It is fast rising into notice as a watering place. Many respectable families have here taken up their residence, and a number of handsome villas, and an excellent hotel, have been erected, all of which are well tenanted in the summer season. There is a church in connection with the Establishment, and achapel for Episcopalians. The Caledonian Railway Company have a station here, on their Wemyss Bay Section, and the river steamers also call to take in passengers for Greenock, Glasgow, Largs, Millport, and other places.

POST OFFICE, INNERKIP, William Finlay, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Greenock) at twenty minutes past five morning, and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes past four afternoon.

JOHNSTONE, ELDERSLIE, KILBARCHAN & LINWOOD.

JOHNSTONE is a very considerable manufacturing village, within the landward part of the Abbey parish of Paisley, 3½ miles W. from that town, 11 W. from Glasgow, 8 N. from Beith, and 14 S.E. from Greenock, most agreeably situated, contiguous to the Black Cart river. The increase of population in this locality is unparalled in Scottish statistics. In 1782 it contained but ten persons. The system of feuing was then commenced here, and since that period it has been progressively increasing up to the present time. Trade and commerce, likewise, have kept pace with the augmentation of its population, there being now in the village numerous cotton mills, a flax mill, iron foundries, and extensive machine and tool manufactories; and two branch banks are established here. Contiguous to the town are several valuable coal mines, which produce to their respective proprietors a very considerable revenue. The most extensive of these mines belongs to Ludovic Houstoun, Esq. of Johnstone Castle, and who is proprietor of Johnstone. The town is very regularly laid out; it has several good streets, a spacious square in its centre, and a large area for a market place; the houses are for the most part substantially constructed, and roofed with slate; the shops are numerous, and well stocked with various domestic and useful commodities—the principal are lighted with gas. The Glasgow and South-Western Railway passes the village, and affords direct communication with all parts of the country. Some years ago a canal was opened between this place, Paisley, and Glasgow, which has proved of the greatest utility. From an eminence on the Paisley road, the village of Johnstone has a pleasing appearance; to the left, at a short distance, stands Johnstone Castle, surrounded by thriving plantations, and commanding a fine view of the country for many miles round. To the west of the town, immediately beyond the river Cart, is the seat of Sir Robert Napier, a delightful residence. Johnstone possesses nothing to invite the antiquarian or amuse the traveller; but curiosity may be gratified by a visit to the village of ELDERSLIE (a mile east of this place), once the residence of the renowned Wallace.

The places of worship are a chapel of ease under the Establishment, a Free church, two United Presbyterian chapels, and one for Roman Catholics. The public institutions are a subscription library, a news-room, a mechanics' institute, Bible, missionary, and friendly societies, a town's school, and various Sunday schools.

A horse fair is held on the Friday before the second Wednesday in January, and a cattle and pleasure fair in the middle of July, which lasts for three days.

KILBARCHAN is a considerable manufacturing village, in the parish of its name, one mile and a half from Johnstone, and about five miles from Paisley; situate on the southern declivity of a hill, and pretty regularly built. Upwards of 1,300 looms are employed in this village and its immediate vicinity, in the manufacture of silk, cotton shawls, robes, &c. In the centre of the village is the school-house, with a tower, on which is the statue of Habbie Simpson, the well-known Scottish piper, born in this parish. It was executed by Archibald Robertson, a young sculptor from Greenock. The places of worship are the parish church and an United Presbyterian chapel. Gas was introduced by a company in 1846, and the village is now well lighted. There are two public libraries containing several thousand volumes. A horse fair is held annually on the first Tuesday in December (old style).

About three miles from Johnstone, and three and a half from Paisley (in Kilbarchan parish), is the manufacturing village of LINWOOD; it contains a large cotton factory, which furnishes employment to most of the inhabitants. Several coal and ironstone mines are in the neighbourhood.

LOCHWINNOCH,

NEW TOWN OF BELTREES AND HOW-WOOD.

LOCHWINNOCH is a large village in the parish of its name; 16½ miles S.W. from Glasgow, 9½ S.S.W from Paisley, 6½ S.S.W. from Johnstone, and 3½ N. from Beith. The Glasgow and South-Western Railway has a station close to the town. The village is situated on the north-west bank of the beautiful lake from which it derives its appellation, and surrounded by scenery of a most interesting and romantic character, highly attractive to the tourist: among which the lovely loch, the banks of the Calder, the sublime cataract of Reekan Linn, the bottomless Gurratt's Linn, and the remains of several old castles, are all eminently worthy of a visit from the stranger to these parts. The lake, which stretches in a northerly and southerly direction, lies in the eastern part of the parish: it receives the Calder water on its west side, and its issue forms the Black Cart river; it is about two miles in length by one in breadth, but was formerly much more extensive, having been contracted by an embankment, whereby several hundred acres of land have been obtained and brought into cultivation. On the north-west side of the loch stands Castle Semple House, the seat of James O. L. Harvey, Esq., the situation of which is in the highest degree picturesque; it occupies the site of the ancient castle of Semple, founded by Lord John Semple about the year 1500: it was demolished in 1735. On a small island in the lake is the 'Peel,' the remains of some forgotton stronghold, of which nothing but a vault now exists. Lochwinnoch possesses some claims to notice as a place of manufactures; it contains an extensive cotton mill, two bleach-fields, a woollen mill, &c.; there is also established here a branch of the City of Glasgow Bank. The village is ornamented by a Parochial Church, having a handsome steeple: also a Free Church, and an United Presbyterian Chapel. Justice of peace courts are held here on the first Saturday of each month. There are two annual fairs; the first, called the 'trades race,' on the first Tuesday in May; and the 'fair of Hill,' first Tuesday in November [old style].

HOW-WOOD is a small village in the parish of Lochwinnoch, 3½ miles from that town, situate on the high road between Beith and Glasgow. About a mile and a half nearer to Lochwinnoch, in that parish, is a place called NEW TOWN OF BELTREES, another small village, neither of which contain any object worthy of particular description.

MEARNS, WITH BUSBY AND NEWTON.

MEARNS is a village in the parish of its name, seven miles from Glasgow and eight from Paisley, and near the line of the Glasgow and Barrhead Railway; the parish lies in the south-eastern part of the county, and extends seven miles in length by about three in breadth. The surface of the land is finely diversified by pleasing undulations, rising gradually from east to west; it is generally fertile, and adapted to the purposes of the dairy, while other portions of the district afford excellent pasturage. The great road from Glasgow to Ayr and Kilmarnock runs through the whole length of the parish; and a road has been opened from Glasgow, which, passing Newton, joins the former road a little beyond the King's Well Inn. In the parish are two bleach fields, calico printing works, and an extensive cotton spinning mill—the latter two at BUSBY, a small romantic village in the parish of Mearns, five miles from Glasgow. At NEWTON, another village in Mearns, three miles and a half from Busby, stands the Parish Church, a neat stone edifice, with a handsome spire, in which is an excellent clock; and the interior contains seven hundred sittings. There is also a chapel for United Presbyterians, which will accommodate a congregation of five hundred persons. The village, which is well built and of pleasing appearance, possesses a superior inn, and a branch of the City of Glasgow Bank. The only object of antiquity in the parish is the Castle of Mearns, near that village: it is a large square tower, seated on a rocky eminence, commanding an extensive and beautiful prospect; it is encompassed by a strong wall, and the entrance appears to have been secured by a drawbridge; this interesting relic of former times is now out of repair and dismantled; it belongs to the family of Blackhall, of Ardgowan, but its origin is lost in obscurity. The parish is adorned by several elegant modern seats and mansions; and the lands are irrigated and refreshed by the waters of three lakes, one of which, named Black Loch, is nearly two miles and a half in circumference.

PAISLEY AND ITS VICINITY.

PAISLEY is a burgh of barony and the seat of a presbytery, in the parish of the abbey of Paisley; 50 miles west by south from Edinburgh, about 7 miles S. by W. from Glasgow, and 17 S.E. from Greenock. This active manufacturing town, so distinguished for the beauty of its shawls and muslins, and its extensive fabrication of thread, stands in a healthful and picturesque situation on the banks of the White Cart, about three miles above the confluence of this river with the Clyde, and enjoys the advantages of railway communication, being connected with Glasgow, Greenock, Kilmarnock, Ayr, &c., by the iron road. The Burgh, or Old Town of Paisley is on the western side of the river; the New Town on the eastern side. The High Church, with its lofty spire, rises from a fine eminence, the south side of which, and its summit, are covered with buildings, and its northern slope is laid out in gardens; this central ridge forms a natural terrace, which runs westward from the river nearly half a mile, terminating abruptly at a point where the Romans had a fort, and a fortified camp, whence is a prospect extensive and beautiful: with this camp several minor stations are believed to have had communication, each placed on the summit of a neighbouring eminence, such as Woodside, the Knock and Castlehead; while the name of 'Causeyside,' still retained by one of the streets of the burgh, is thought to indicate the former existence of a Roman road, leading to or by the principal station.

Paisley is generally supposed to have been the Vanduaria of Ptolemy, a notion supported by the etymology of the name Vanduaria—the British words wen dur signifying the 'white water,' and thus expressing the present distinctive appellation of the river, on the banks of which the town is built. In ancient days, Paisley was distinguished only for its abbey; and the shrine of Saint Mirren, which it enclosed, was resorted to by multitudes of pilgrims from all parts of Scotland; this Saint, Saint James, and the Virgin Mary divided the tutelary honours between them. This great and opulent monastic establishment was founded in the year 1160, by Walter, great steward of Scotland, and son of Allan, the first of the Stewarts, who, for a long period, made this abbey their family mausoleum; the religious order of the Clugni were the first occupants; it was originally a priory, but was afterwards elevated to the rank of an abbey—its lands being by Robert II. erected into a regality, of which the abbot was lord. By Abbot George Schaw, in 1484, the abbey precints were surrounded by a lofty wall of hewn stone, a mile in circumference, the greater part of which has been demolished; still a good deal of it remains, as does an inscription setting forth, in uncouth rhyme, Abbot Schaw as its builder, this inscription is on a house in Lawn-street. In 1588, the reformation having taken place, the abbey and lands were made a temporal barony in favour of Lord Claude Hamilton, third son of the Duke de Chatelerault, and on whom was conferred the title of Lord Paisley. The abbey lands having been transferred from the Earl of Abercorn to the Earl of Angus, and from him to Lord Dundonald, the greater portion became the property, by purchase, of the Marquis of Abercorn, who intended to have kept it entire as a residence, but finding it had become much delapidated, he let it on building leases; so that the parks, orchards, and gardens of the abbey subsequently became the site of the new town of Paisley, and the stones from the wall form a portion of the materials of which the houses were built. The abbey church, mutilated as it now is, constitutes the most interesting public structure of which Paisley can boast; the nave, which in the interior exhibits three tiers of arches, is neatly fitted up, and contains some curious monuments and sepulchral inscriptions. It is the Parochial church of an extensive rural district, lying around the town, and called the 'Parish of the Abbey of Paisley.' The choir is levelled to within a few feet of the ground; the north transept is more entire, and displays in its large well-proportioned northern window a striking relic of ancient ecclesiastical magnificence. Three windows of good size and elegant design, with a recessed doorway, form the principal ornaments of the western front. Near the abbey is a Gothic chapel, built as a place of sepulture for the Abercorn family. The remarkable degree of resonance possessed by this little building (which is still, from the circumstance, called the sounding aisle), has been magnified by most writers; much of the effect which it formerly produced is now, however, lost, from the reconstruction within the chapel of a large altar tomb, consecrated to the memory of Marjory Bruce, wife of the great steward, Walter, as well as mother to Robert II., whose remains were removed from the monastery in 1770. The aperture in the brickwork, formed to close up the interstices of a once beautiful eastern window, likewise contributes to weaken the echo. It is not improbable that, for some time after the suppression of its abbey, Paisley languished, and when Crawford, the first regular historian of Renfrewshire, produced his learned and useful work, the town consisted of no more than one principal street, and a few narrow lanes or wynds branching from it. Its population did not at that time exceed 3,000; nay, some assert that its inhabitants were then only about 1,500 in number.

The portion called the Old Town is considerably more extensive than the new, and contains all the chief warehouses of the manufacturers. Many of its streets are well built, and there are three parallel lines running from east to west of very great length. The New Town, comprising many streets, occupies a level surface on the eastern side of the Cart. Of both portions of the town, the entire length, reckoning from the first suburban houses on the east to the last occurring on the west, can scarcely be less than two miles; while the extreme breadth of Paisley, from north to south, must reach at least a mile and a half. East, north, and west of it are suburbs with distinct names. Such are Williamsburgh, Doveland, Lylesland, Carriage-hill, Charleston, Maxwellton, Fergusliе, &c. The eastern and western parts of the town are connected by three bridges, respectively of one, two, and three arches, and called individually the Old, the Saucel, and the Sneddon bridge, as also by the railway bridge, which is near the Sneddon bridge. Gas was first introduced in 1824, and all the streets are illumined by it; and the town is well supplied with water. A most conspicuous public building is the Castle, a large towered, turreted and embattled fabric, comprehending besides a variety of rooms and offices for county and burgh meetings, and for public functionaries, a county gaol, a debtors' gaol, a bridewell, and a prison chapel; between the noble pile which forms the front edifice and the prison in its rear are two courts for exercise and air. The steeple of the former town-house of Paisley yet remains, and forms an architectural ornament to the area called the Cross. By a charter granted by James IV., in 1481, in favour of Abbot George Schaw, Paisley was created a burgh of barony. The present municipal body consists of a provost, four bailies, a treasurer, a procurator fiscal, and ten councillors, with a town clerk and chamberlain; the provost and bailies act as justices of the peace. For the New Town, and for the burgh, a separate police establishment is organised; the latter is divided into eight police wards. Paisley returns one member to the legislature.

MANUFACTURES AND TRADE.—A young lady of some historical notoriety was the original cause of Paisley becoming a manufacturing town. In 1697 a daughter of the Laird of Bargarren, aged eleven years, named Christian Shaw, preferred a charge of bewitching her (either from cruelty or revenge) against a servant girl, with whom she had quarrelled, and nineteen alleged confederates, who were all condemned, and five of the number burnt on Gallow-green, Paisley. The inciter to this detestable act of superstitious cruelty subsequently acquired great skill in spinning fine yarn; her first production having been sold very advantageously at Bath, by Lady Blantyre, to the lace makers, stimulated Miss Shaw to extend her transactions by availing herself of the co-operation of a relative in Holland; the demand for this thread soon became eager, and the most extensive manufactures, that arose in Scotland at that period acknowledged 'the bewitched lady,' as their originator, who afterwards became the wife of the minister of Kilmaurs. Course linen checks were the first fabrics produced by the Paisley looms; to these succeeded others of a lighter kind, such as lawns, both figured and plain; silk gauze then took the lead, about the year 1760, and Spitalfields soon yielded to its more successful competitor—for such was the celebrity of Paisley gauze that warehouses were engaged for its sale in London, Dublin and Paris. The produce of this article, together with sewing-thread, lawn and linen gauze, amounted for the year 1784 to £579,000, and more than 26,000 persons were employed in their fabrication. But the demand for she popular gauze rapidly decreased, and soon became insignificant: muslin, cambric and cotton thread were the next productions of Paisley industry and skill; to these succeeded silk and cotton shawls, and scarfs and plaids, composed of silk and merino wool, ascending in price from five shillings to fifteen guineas; these still continue to exhibit the ingenuity and taste of the Paisley weavers, and in the manufacture of them they have arrived at great perfection. In Paisley and its neighbourhood are numerous thread and cotton spinning mills, bleaching and printing works, dychouses, power loom factories, iron and brass foundries, engineers and millwrights' shops, timber yards, a brewery, distilleries, soap starch and corn flour manufactories,and a very extensive tannery. There are six banking establishments in Paisley; these are branches of the 'Union Bank of Scotland,' the 'City of Glasgow Bank,' the 'Bank of Scotland,' the 'National Bank of Scotland,' the 'Clydesdale Bank,' and the 'British Linen Company.'

Between the year 1786 and 1791, the White Cart river was, at an expense of £4,000 (and partly by means of a navigable cut, which enables vessels to avoid certain shallows in the river), made navigable to the town, for sloops of forty to fifty tons burthen: attempts were some time ago made with dredging machines to deepen it so as to admit of vessels of greater burthen, but it was found to be impracticable. The Glasgow and Ardrossan canal passes along the southern verge of the town, presenting at one point a fine basin and wharf.

Places of Worship, Institutions, &c.—Paisley contains eight churches connected with the Establishment, viz., the Abbey, the High Church, St. George's, the Martyr's, the North, the South, the Middle, and the Gaelic churches, and six Free churches; there are also six United Secession chapels, one Reformed Presbyterian, one Episcopalian, two Congregationalists, three Baptist, two Methodist, an Independent Methodist, and one for the numerous Roman Catholics in Paisley—the situation of each, and the names of their respective ministers, will be found in a subsequent page. The following institutions and schools are liberally maintained by the inhabitants of Paisley, viz., the Dispensary and House of Recovery, the Town Hospital or Poor House, the Deaf and Dumb Institution, the Philosophical Institution and Humane Society; the Grammar school, Town's Mercantile and Mathematical school, Town's English school, Hutcheson's Charity school, Roman Catholic school, Educational Association schools, a Sessional school, Sabbath, Infants' and several Parochial schools. A Hospital school, richly endowed by the late John Neilson, Esq. (a citizen of Paisley), and named after him, was opened in 1852; it is a handsome massive grey structure, surmounted by a lofty dome, and from its elevated position is a conspicuous ornament to the town. There are some friendly associations, bible and missionary societies, and three public libraries, and public reading rooms for the lower classes have been established by some of the principal manufacturers in different parts of the town. Opposite to the cross is a handsome structure: the exterior of the upper part is adorned with Ionic pillars; the interior includes a public coffee room of noble dimensions, on the tables of which newspapers, reviews and magazines abound; and the place is liberally thrown open to the visits of strangers. There is a neat theatre, which is opened occasionally for those who derive amusement from such a source; and races are held annually in August, on a picturesque course half a mile from the town, near the Greenock road. A new workhouse was erected in 1850; it occupies a commanding situation in the upper part of the town, the style is Elizabethan, and there is accommodation for six hundred inmates; adjoining is the Lunatic asylum, built in the same style, and capable of containing eighty patients.

Paisley may boast of having been the birth-place or residence of several individuals noted for genius or science; Wilson, the celebrated American ornithologist, and Tannahill, the lyric poet, were natives of Paisley; and the distinguished Dr. Witherspoon, once minister of the parish, wrote several of his best works here, prior to his emigration. The country around Paisley (except on the north, where a widespread fertile plain expands itself), is most agreeably diversified by gentle risings—by wood—by water—and in short, by all the constituents of the soft and beautiful. A fall in the Cart, just above the town, and an aqueduct bridge over the Ardrossan canal, deserve mention, and from the stranger a visit.

The weekly market is held on Thursday; and the fairs on the third Thursdays of February and May, and the second Thursdays of August and November. February and August are the principal for cattle, and last three days each; those of May and November are mostly for hiring servants; St. James's Day, in August, is distinguished by horse racing and various shows, which attract a great concourse of persons from the surrounding country.

POLLOCKSHAWS, THORNLIE-BANK,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

POLLOCKSHAWS (or Pollokshaws) is a thriving manufacturing town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Eastwood, two miles and a half from Glasgow; situated on the road to Irvine, near to the White Cart river, in a pleasing valley sheltered by plantations, and consists of several well-built streets, somewhat irregular in appearance. The trade of the place is considerable, there being extensive establishments for spinning, weaving, and dyeing, also bleach fields, print works, and the manufacture of earthenware, besides collieries. altogether furnishing employment to the greater portion of the inhabitants. The town boasts a town-house (a neat building with a spire), an extensive public library, a Parochial school, and several private academies. Pollockshaws was erected into a burgh of barony in 1814, in favour of Sir John Maxwell, of Pollock, and the government of the town vested in a provost, a bailie, six councillors, and a treasurer. Branches of the City of Glasgow Bank, and the Clydesdale Banking Co. are established here, a Freemasons' lodge, and various friendly societies, one of which has been a century in existence. A sheriff court is held every alternate month, a justice of peace court once a month, and criminal courts once a fortnight. The places of worship are two Established Churches, two Free Churches, chapels for United Presbyterians, and Original Seceders, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The parish of Eastwood is four miles in length by three in breadth—bounded on the north by Govan and Cathcart, and on the south by Neilston and Mearns. The district is generally under a creditable state of cultivation, and abounds in freestone; and, besides the stream of the White Cart, is watered by the Auldhouse burn. The Glasgow and Barrhead Railway has a station close to the town; and omnibuses run to and from Glasgow several times a day.

THORNLIE-BANK is a small village lying a little to the south of Pollockshaws, in a beautiful hollow, watered by the Auldhouse burn. The manufacture of cotton is carried on here to a great extent, embracing every process from the raw material to the most beautiful printed fabrics. The United Presbyterians have a chapel here.

PORT GLASGOW AND KILMALCOLM.

PORT GLASGOW is a sea-port and opulent burgh of baron and regality; pleasantly situated on the south bank of the the river Clyde, twenty miles below Glasgow, three miles (by rail two and a half) east from Greenock, on the Greenock Section of the Caledonian line of Railway. It is protected on the south by a range of high hills, and an extensive view of corresponding eminences presents itself on the north. The lower grounds in the vicinity of the town are embellished with handsome villas, to which are generally attached excellent gardens. The town stands immediately contiguous to the old barony and village of Newark, at the eastern extremity of which is the ancient castle, formerly occupied by the barons of the name of Maxwell, now the property of Sir M. Shaw Stewart; it is a fine old ruin, in good preservation; and the situation is much admired for its commanding view of the Clyde and adjacent picturesque scenery, particularly that wild and singularly formed rocky eminence on which Dumbarton castle stands. Port Glasgow is neatly built, the streets running at right angles. It possesses a town-house (erected by the magistrates, in 1815, at a cost of nearly £12,000), comprising a council chamber, a court hall, a police station, and offices for the accommodation of the town clerk, fiscal and other public offices; also a public reading room. This pile of building, which is of the finest Grecian architecture, is surmounted by an elegant spire one hundred and fifty feet in height, and adorned with a good clock. The custom-house is a handsome building, and contains offices and rooms for the different officers in that branch of the revenue.

The trade of this port town has been, for these many years, gradually improving; the tonnage employed in the American trade is very considerable, as also a very fair share of India and general imports. It enjoys the superior advantage of an extensive wet dock, constructed at an enormous expense: the tide harbours, which are large and commodious, are remarkable for their facility of entry and egress, and are accessable to vessels of the largest tonnage at all times of the tide; contiguous to the harbours is a large graving dock, the first of the kind constructed in Scotland, and still preserved in excellent order. Connected with the town are five extensive shipbuilding establishments, giving employment to many hands; there are besides, various branches of manufacture on a large scale, established here, consisting principally of a sugar refinery, saw mills, roperies, iron and brass foundries, sail cloth factories, cooperages, and sail and block making.

Port Glasgow formerly belonged to the parish of Newark; in 1695 it was erected into a separate parochial district, and, in 1775, the town was constituted a burgh of barony, and its government confided to a provost, two magistrates, and seven councillors; it joins with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Dumbarton, and Kilmarnock in returning one member to parliament. Through the public spirit of the inhabitants, a new Parish church was erected upon the site of the old one; in external appearance it is handsome, and its interior is chaste, elegant and convenient; there is also a quoad sacra Parish church, a Free church, and a place of worship each for United Presbyterians, Reformed Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Roman Catholics. The weekly market of Port Glasgow is held on Friday; and there is one annual fair, which takes place on the third Tuesday in July.

KILMALCOLM is a village situated on the east side of the parish of its name, on the road from the Bridge of Weir to Port Glasgow, ten miles from Paisley, seven from Greenock, and rather more than that distance from Johnstone; it is an agricultural district, intersected by the Gryfe, and the Duchal streams, whose banks are well cultivated, while a greater proportion of the surface of the parish presents the less pleasing contrast of moss and moor.

RENFREW, INCHINAN, AND YOKER.

RENFREW is an ancient town and royal burgh, the capital of the county and parish of its name; 50 miles W. from Edinburgh, 13 E. by S. from Port Glasgow, 6 W. from Glasgow, and 3 N. from Paisley; situated a short distance from the Clyde, and one mile east from the river Cart. In old charters the name of this place is variously written Ranfrew, Rainfrew and, as it is now spelt, Renfrew; it is composed of two British words ren (or rhyn), a point or promontory, and frew, a flux or flow—implying 'a point of land subject to be overflowed by the tide,' which certainly is applicable to the local character and figure of a part of the parish. Walter, the first Stewart, built a castle here, on a small height called the Castle-hill, on the margin of the bank of the Clyde; and Renfrew was an early and favourite residence of the Stewarts, long ere they succeeded to the Scottish throne. The present town consists of one long street, from which several smaller streets issue. There are established two extensive ironfounding and engineering establishments, and two ship building yards, with slips capable of raising vessels of large burthen, large gum and starch works, forge works, a dye works, &c: these, with a distillery in operation at YOKER, are the principal establishments which come under the head manufactures, if we except a number of looms employed in weaving for the Paisley and Glasgow houses. Gas has also been introduced and the town is well lighted. There is a commodious and substantial stone wharf, at which the largest vessels that frequent the river can discharge and load with the same facility as at Glasgow; from this wharf a branch line, communicates with the Paisley and Renfrew Railway, whereby goods discharged are conveyed to the former town: the main line of the railway is connected with a wharf on the Clyde (about one hundred yards below the stone wharf), where passengers embark in, and land from, the different steam-boats navigating the Clyde. As a royal burgh, Renfrew is governed by a provost, two bailies, and nine councillors. It joins with Port Glasgow (and other places there named), in returning one member to parliament. The vicinity of the town is adorned by some fine estates and mansions; of the latter, the most worthy of the stranger's notice are Elderslie, the residence of Mrs. Speirs, and Blythwood, the seat of Archibald Campbell, Esq.—both situated on the banks of the Clyde, and their beauty increased by delightful plantations. The places of worship are an Established Church, a Chapel for United Presbyterians, and a Free Church. There are also several good schools in the burgh. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in May, and the second Friday in June.

The parish of INCHINAN is situate to the north-west of Renfrew: it is watered by the Clyde, the White Cart and the Gryfe rivers. At the confluence of the two latter streams is a fine bridge of ten arches forming a communication with Renfrew: to enable vessels navigating between Paisley and the Clyde to pass this bridge, a canal has been cut, across which has been thrown a handsome iron swing bridge. The road from Glasgow to Greenock passes through the whole length of this parish.

ROSS & CROMARTY SHIRES.

ROSS-SHIRE.

THIS is a large section in the north of Scotland, being eighty miles in length and nearly the same in breadth (exclusive of the Isle of Lewis), extending from the German Ocean to the Atlantic. On the north it is bounded by Sutherlandshire, on the south by Inverness-shire, on the east by the Ocean and the small county of Cromarty, and on the west by the Western Sea: on the east coast the county terminates in an obtuse point, and on this side it is deeply penetrated by the bay of Cromarty; the western shore is laid open by many gulfs or arms of the sea, the waters of which roll far within the land. From the numerous indentations made by lakes and friths, the form of Ross-shire is of the most irregular character. The main land (exclusive of Cromartyshire) is computed to contain about one million, eight hundred and fifty thousand, eight hundred acres, and Lewis Isle three hundred and fifty-nine thousand; of the first number, five thousand, nine hundred belong to the district of Ferintosh, a part of the county of Nairn.

SOIL, SURFACE, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The portion of this extensive county capable of cultivation is very small; the arable lands extend along the eastern coast, and are found in patches here and there on the western; a great proportion of the low lands of Easter Ross, and a small portion of those near Dingwall, is loamy clay; the rest is light soil, various qualities. The whole of this comprehensive shire, except a district on the east side, called Easter Ross, is mountainous, wild, and pastoral: the mountains are for the most part in groups, many of them reaching a considerable elevation; Ben Wyvis is considered the most lofty—it rises upwards of 3,700 feet above the level of the sea. Almost the whole of the west coast presents magnificent mountain scenery, and the interior is in general picturesque. The climate of this county is unsteady, and exhibits the extremes of long dreary cold winters, and some very hot summer weather; the west coast is subject to heavy rains. The natural forests, which formerly covered large tracts, have nearly all disappeared, with the exception of the birch, and some oaks, in different parts of the county; the remains of fir wood are extensive, and the trunks of oaks of an immense size are still to be seen. Planting is prosecuted with great spirit—large additions have been in progress for many years. The improvements effected in farming within the last sixty years have completely changed the aspect of the district of Easter Ross; and indeed this portion, as well as other parts of the county, may now compete, in the skilful management of the land, with any other division of Scotland: to such perfection have the agriculturists of Ross-shire brought their system, that they now grow wheat to the amount of twenty thousand quarters, and export grain in quantities of full ten thousand quarters. The mineralogy of the shire is interesting to the geologist, but of little value in a directly useful point of view: limestone occurs in several localities on the west coast, but there is a general destitution of coal throughout the county. The salmon fishery is carried on to a considerable extent in the different rivers and estuaries, and that for herrings is pursued with great success on the east coast, and partially on the west.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAY.—The principal rivers on the east side of the county are the Conan, which flows into the Cromarty Frith, and the Oikel and the Carron, which pass into the Dornoch Frith; the largest stream on the west coast is the Ewe, which has a short course from Loch Maree. The Conan and its principal branch, the Raney (or Blackwater), form some falls of considerable height and beauty. The indentations of the sea, or saltwater lakes, on the west coast proceeding from north to south, are Loch Euard, Loch Broom, Loch Greinord, Loch Ewe, Gair-Loch, Loch Torridon, Loch Keeshorn, Loch Carron, and Loch Alsh, with (its inner southerly arm) Loch Duich. The county likewise possesses a great number of lakes of fresh water in the interior; but none of them, save Loch Maree, near the west coast, are of sufficient magnitude or beauty to excite interest. The Highland Railway runs through this county on the east coast: its present terminus is Ardgay, for Bonar Bridge.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Ross-shire comprehends thirty complete parishes, and three parts of parishes; it has three royal burghs, namely, Dingwall, Tain, and Fortrose; the two former, with the town of Cromarty, join with Kirkwall, Wick, and Dornoch, in returning one member to parliament, and the shires of Ross and Cromarty unite in sending another. The burgh of Fortrose is associated with Inverness, Nairn, and Forres, in parliamentary representation.

CROMARTYSHIRE.

THIS county is so amalgamated with, and intersected by Ross-shire, that, as is observed by respectable authorities, 'there can be hardly be a literary separation of the two, as there should certainly not be a political.' The greater part of it lies in the 'Black Isle,' or that peninsula which is bounded by the Frith of Cromarty on the north, and the Moray Frith on the south and east. The length of the district is about sixteen miles, and its average breadth between six and seven; it is computed that the superficies of the land in the county amounts altogether to about three hundred and forty square miles. Cromarty is mentioned, in the fifth parliament of James V, in the year 1537, as a separate county; and the same distinction is observed in subsequent legislative acts that apply to the statistical divisions of the country; yet it has still been included in the shrievalty of Ross, and at this time the sheriff substitute holds a monthly court at Cromarty (the only town in the shire), from which the county has received its distinctive recognised title.

SOIL, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—Originally, and at not a distant period, the greater part of this district presented a moorish, unprofitable surface; but in recent times agricultural improvement, extensively pursued with persevering industry and skill, have materially changed its features: the soil has been rendered generally productive—planting has been introduced, and is gradually progressing. The climate is drier, and the air more genial, than in the further northern and more western Highland tracts; the culture of the land has contributed to the amelioriation of the temperature of Cromarytyshire, and its crops are in most seasons earlier than in many of the adjacent districts. Its mineral treasure is but scanty,—freestone and granite comprise the only descriptions worthy of notice. The fisheries on the coast are the most productive sources of the public profit and prosperity.

POPULATION OF THE SHIRE IN THE YEARS 1811, 1821, 1831, 1841, 1851, AND 1861.

The Italic letters b. p. and t. respectively signify Burgh, Parish, and Town; (in C.) implies that a part of the parish is situate in Cromartyshire.

CROMARTY,

NIGG, RESOLIS, JAMIMAVILLE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CROMARTY is a burgh of barony, and the capital of its parish and county; 19½ miles N.E. from Inverness, 17 N.W. from Nairn, 11 S. from Tain, 9 N. by E. from Fortrose, and 8 W. by N. from Invergordon; situated upon a promontory, jutting into the neck of the sea connecting the Moray with the Cromarty Frith, and at a short distance from the entrance into a harbour esteemed one of the safest and most capacious in North Britain; in this haven vessels of any tonnage may ride in perfect security. The entrance from the sea lies between two wooded headlands, called the 'Sutors of Cromarty,' which almost meet and reflect each other's form—producing an effect, in combination with the general scenery, eminently picturesque. The view from the hill of Cromarty is truly delightful, and is the admiration of every visitor. Beneath the south Sutor is a profound chasm, called 'Macfarquha's Bed,' and a petrifying spring, called the 'Dripping Well,' both attractive natural curiosities, never overlooked by the investigating stranger or tourist. Near the north Sutor are seven sunken rocks, termed the 'Seven King's Sons,' so named from the circumstance (according to tradition) of seven individuals who bore that relation to royalty having been shipwrecked upon them and drowned in returning from France. There has been erected, on an eminence immediately behind the town, a monument to the memory of the late Hugh Miller, the eminent geologist, and author of the "Testimony of the Rocks," &c., who was a native of Cromarty. The column is 40 feet in height, and is surmounted by a full-sized figure of Hugh Miller. The execution of the work is by Mr. Handyside Ritchie, of Edinburgh. There is a fine commodious quay, constructed at the joint expense of government and the proprietor of the Cromarty estate; and the town is supplied with water, by pipe, from the summit of the south Sutor, which obviates the inconvenience long felt by the inhabitants from the deficiency of this indispensable element. The herring and white fishery is prosecuted in this quarter with persevering industry and general success: large quantities are exported to foreign countries, and the remainder (with the exception of the local consumption) to the London and various home markets. The monetary transactions of the place are facilitated by branches of the 'Caledonian Bank' and the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland.' Cromarty was anciently a royal burgh, but was disfranchised by an act of the Scottish Privy Council, in compliance with the solicitations of Sir John Urquhart, proprietor of the estate of Cromarty; it now, however, holds the rank stated in the brief description of shires, and joins with Kirkwall, Wick, Dornock, Tain, and Dingwall in returning one member to parliament. The parish church, an ancient building, stands at the east end of the town; a chapel for the accommodation of the Gaelic portion of the community, is situated on the hill south of the town, and a Free Church, is the only other place of worship.

NIGG is a parish three miles north of Cromarty: its size is about six miles in length, with a breadth of three. There are an Established and a Free Church, with schools attached. North Hill, in this parish, 500 feet high, is the resort of eagles, goats, and water-fowl.

RESOLIS parish lies on the south side of the Cromarty Firth, and consists of a portion of the peninsula territory, called the "BLACK ISLE," being eight miles long, with a breadth of three, having a coast of about ten miles. In it is the village of JAMIMAVILLE.

DINGWALL,

STRATHPEFFER, FODDERTY, CONTIN, KNOCKBAIN, URRAY, URQUHART, KILLEARNAN MARYBURGH, CONAN BRIDGE, AUCHTERHEAD AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DINGWALL is a parish, royal burgh, and market town, the latter 178 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh, 23 N.W. from Inverness, 20 S.W. from Cromarty, 13 S.W. from Invergordon, and 9 N. from Beauly; pleasantly situated in the eastern part of Ross-shire, on a fertile plain, near the western extremity of the beautiful Frith of Cromarty, which is navigable at high water for light craft as far as the town. About three-quarters of a mile from the town is a pier, or jetty, for the convenience of vessels in discharging their cargoes or taking in freight. It is supposed that at some remote period Dingwall was much more extensive than it now is, as causeways and foundations of buildings have been found some hundreds of yards from the site of the present town. As it now exists, Dingwall is neat and well built, and consists of one main street, well paved, and a few smaller ones; it is copiously supplied with excellent water from springs above the town, into which it is conveyed by means of pipes. The town-house near the centre of the burgh, is a curious old building, with a spire and clock; and the church is a plain structure on the north side of the town. In the neighbourhood of the latter edifice is an obelisk, fifty-seven feet in height, erected to the memory of George, first Earl of Cromarty, who, eccentric at death as in life, in accordance with his last injunctions, was buried here. Near the town formerly stood the mansion of the powerful and noble family of Ross; a rude fragment in the garden attached to a villa is now all that remains of that once princely domicile. Dingwall was erected a royal burgh by Alexander II., and its charter was renewed by James IV.; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and ten councillors, and joins with Cromarty, Tain, Dornock, Wick, and Kirkwall, in returning one member to parliament. The town is eligibly situated for the purposes of a more extensive trade than it enjoys; its business is chiefly of a local character, manufactures not having as yet found a seat here. In the High-street of the town is a handsome and spacious hotel, the National, in the occupation of Mr. Sinclair, where the best of accommodation may be obtained. A little further up the High-street is the extensive ironmongery and agricultural warehouse, erected by Mr. D. G. Ross, the occupier. The Caledonian is also a comfortable commercial hotel. In the same street are branches respectively of the National Bank of Scotland, the Caledonian Bank, and the City of Glasgow Bank. A little to the west of the town stand the County Buildings, forming a very conspicuous feature in its general appearance: they were completed in 1845, at a cost of £5,000, and contain a county room, a sheriff's court room, and county clerk's and other offices, together with one of the most complete prisons for its size in the kingdom. Dingwall is surrounded by some of the most beautiful scenery in Scotland. The valley of Strathpeffer recedes to the westward, and is as lovely as any Lowland vale; while the mountains at its head present all the rude grandeur of the Highlands. The hill on the north side of the town, a beautiful woody declivity, will remind the traveller of the celebrated hill of Kinnoul, near Perth. About a mile and a half from Dingwall, on the road to Beauly, is the small village of MARYBURGH, seated on the left bank of the Conan, on the opposite side of which river is CONAN BRIDGE, another little village. In the former village a handsome Free Church and manse were erected in 1850. The market of Dingwall is held every alternate Saturday; and the fairs on the third Wednesday in January, the third Wednesday in February, the first Wednesday in June, the first Tuesday in July, the first Wednesday in September, and in November, and the Tuesday next before Christmas (new style). The mineral wells of STRATHPEFFER, situate at the upper extremity of a fertile valley of that name, which stretches about three miles due west from Dingwall, occasioned the erection of some twenty or thirty neat villas or cottages around them for the accommodation of invalid visitors, and there are two good hotels. The small hamlet of AUCHTERHEAD, about two miles distant from the pump-room (or public lounge) attached to the principal well, and many of the adjacent farm houses, likewise furnish lodgings to strangers when their influx is great, as it generally is during the months of June, July, and August. The situation of these wells is romantic—the neighbouring country fertile, and exceedingly beautiful. The springs seem to rise through the porous red sandstone which is prevalent in this district, and at no great distance from the lofty mountain, Ben Wyvis, one of the most conspicuous eminences in the north of Scotland. The waters have long been known as medicinal, and an analysis of their composition was published by Mr. Donald Munro in the 'Philosophical Transactions' for 1772: they were brought into considerable celebrity by Dr. Morrison, an Aberdeenshire gentleman, who was an enthusiast for their sanitary virtues, affirming them to be the strongest and most salubrious in Great Britain; they have subsequently been visited by various scientific individuals, particularly by Dr. T. Thompson, in May, 1828, who analysed the waters with the most scrupulous exactness. Strathpeffer is bounded on the north by a high sandstone ridge, and on the south it is skirted by the steep green wooded acclivities of Knock-Farrel, one of the most extensive and strongly vitrified forts (or ancient beacon hills) in the country. The public road through the valley passes along the property, almost exclusively, of the Marchioness of Stafford, sole heiress of the estates of Cromertie, and bounds the grounds of the ancient seat of the Cromertie, Castle Leod, a castellated mansion, still inhabited; the same road, on quitting the strath, runs by the romantic and beautifully wooded knolls of Coul, the property of Sir William Mackenzie, Bart. and the manse, village, and island plain of Contin, beyond which the visitor of this district may either wander along the picturesque shores of Loch Echiltie, and the sheep walks of Comrie to the cascades of the Conan—or, holding more to the north, he will be delighted with the falls of Rogie, on the Blackwater, which flows from the upland lake and moors of Strathgarye. Nearer to the mineral spa, he may likewise be gratified with a walk through the lawns and pleasure grounds of Brahan Castle, the ancient and princely residence of the Seaforth family; this beautiful seat is situated below the southern slope of Knock-Farrel, and commands an extensive, magnificent and pleasingly varied prospect, comprehending the partially wooded and cultivated courses of the rivers Conan and Orrin.

CONTIN is a parish joining Fodderty on the west, it is forty miles long by a mean breadth of six miles. It is distant from Dingwall five miles.

KNOCKBAIN is a small parish, eight miles from Dingwall, it is only three miles broad by five in length.

FODDERTY parish is a very long one, it being thirty miles in length by a breadth of only four miles; it joins the parish of Dingwall.

KILLEARNAN is a small parish, eight miles in length by a breadth of five miles; it is distant from Dingwall five miles.

The parish of URQUHART is only two miles distant from Dingwall. It is ten miles long with a breadth of five miles.

URRAY is a parish five miles distant from Dingwall, it is fifteen miles in length, with a breadth of nine miles.

FORTROSE IN ROSEMARKIE, AND AVOCH.

FORTROSE is a small market town and representative burgh in the parish of Rosemarkie; 21 miles S. from Tain, 18 N.N.E. from Beauly, and 10 N. from Inverness, situated on the north side of the inner part of the Moray Frith, nearly opposite to Fort George, from which it is distant two miles and a half. Before the abolition of episcopal establishments in Scotland, Fortrose cathedral was that of the bishopric of Ross, and this town was likewise the chief seat of learning in this quarter of that kingdom; it was mentioned in history by the title of the 'Chanonry of Ross.' James II., in 1444 united the town in burghal previleges with the neighbouring village of Rosemarkie, under the name of Fort-Ross, which has since been softened down into Fortrose. But small portions of the ancient cathedral now remain entire; one part of it is used as a court-house and prison, and another division as a burial-place.

ROSEMARKIE is comparitively a smaller place than Fortrose, though in point of antiquity it takes the precedence as being a parish town. Between the former place and Fort George there is a regular ferry, and the town has an excellent harbour, erected by parliamentary commissioners. Fortrose enjoys every advantage for sea-bathing; and there is an excellent hotel—the 'Royal,' which affords very good accommodation, and is also a posting establishment. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild and nine councillors: and it joins with Inverness, Forres and Nairn in sending one member to parliament.

The Parish Church, which is at Rosemarkie, was completed in 1821; it is in the late Gothic style, and considered to be a very handsome well-finished building; its situation has been happily selected, and its commanding aspect on the coast uniformly attracts the particular notice of strangers. More recently a neat church has been erected at Fortrose for the Free Communion of Scotland, and there is an Episcopal Chapel. The parish of Rosemarkie extends six miles in length, by three in breadth. Its situation is fine and pleasant; the hills both on the north and south are for the most part arable, being in summer covered with verdure and producing early and abundant crops. The coast all along between Rosemarkie and Chanonry is bold and rocky; it abounds with romantic views and frightful precipices. As the country lies dry and has the benefit of fine sea breezes, the air is pure and salubrious. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in April, the third Wednesday in June, and the first Wednesday in November.

(AND VILLAGES OF POOLEWE, AULTBEA AND KENLOCHEWE), APPLECROSS, LOCHCARRON, LOCHALSH, KINTAIL AND GLENSHIEL.

GAIRLOCH parish is about forty miles in length by thirty-eight in breadth, and abounds in mountains, lochs, heath, &c. For beauty of scenery and abundance of game of all descriptions, it is perhaps unsurpassed by any other district in the north. An established and a Free Church, together with several schools are in the parish.

POOLEWE is a small village in the parish of Gairloch, 64 miles W. from Dingwall, and about the same distance S.E. from Stornoway; situated at the head of a fine bay called Loch Ewe. According to an inventory from the title deeds, still in the possession of the Gairloch family, the old name for the village of Poolewe was Clive. It was erected into a borough of barons in 1619, and a charter of registration, in favour of the then proprietor, was granted under the Great Seal, erecting the borough of Clive, on the water of Ewe, into a borough of barons; and the harbour of Ewe into a free port, with power from year to year of electing a provost, bailies, &c. and not only of keeping borough courts for the good government of the borough, and the administration of justice to the inhabitants, and all others concerned, but of creating burgesses, levying the borough duties, buying and selling merchandise as practised in other boroughs in the kingdom, and planting artizans, keeping weights and measures, and levying customs, anchorage, &c. after the manner of other royalties; of having a market cross, a Saturday market once a week, and a public market once a year, under the name of Michaelmas market, beginning September 29th, and continuing four days. It does not appear that any use was ever made of this charter, as far as the borough of Clive was concerned. It is very probable that the proprietor of Gairloch, may have desired to introduce trade and commerce into the country, and had 'planted artizans' at Poolewe, and obtained this charter to encourage the settling of others. However this may be, Poolewe at the present day has no evidence of the success of such an attempt. The proprietor, John of Gairloch, may have attempted such favourite schemes, but it appears that his successor, Alexander, did not carry them out. John died eleven years after the granting of the charter, & Alexander eight years later, leaving a son, Kenneth, a minor. Poolewe is part of the Estate of Gairloch—is a quoad sacra parish; a quoad sacra church, and a Free church, are the places of worship. In Poolewe and the neighbouring villages are several schools for the education of the young; the school at BUALNALUIP is one of the finest erections for educational purposes in any rural parish in the north of Scotland, it was erected and endowed by Francis Harford Mackenzie, Esq. The only station on the west coast for curing salmon, grilse, and trout, is that at Poolewe; which is carried on to a great extent by Messrs. Hogarth & Co. of Aberdeen. Poolewe is about two miles from Loch Maree which abounds with fish. This lake contains twenty-four islands; some of these are but little raised above the water, and are covered with scattered firs, and with thickets of birch, alder, and holly; while they are separated by narrow sinuous channels. The northern margin of the loch presents a variety of close shore scenery, consisting of rocky and wooded bays and creeks crowned by noble overhanging cliffs and mountains; in one place the remains of a fir forest, in a situation almost incredible, produces a style of landscape that might be expected among the Alps, but not within the more confined scope and lower arrangements of Scottish mountains. The lake is eighteen miles in length by from three to four broad; one of the islands is called Maree, from which the water takes its name; tradition says that some noble personages from Norway were buried here.

Loch Maree is the property of Sir Kenneth S. M'Kenzie, of Gairloch. Into the inner part of Loch Ewe (or Ew, or Eu) pours the river Ewe, which is scarcely two miles in length, and is the natural outlet from Loch Maree; the river has a rapid turbulent course, and is noted for the abundance of its salmon. Nearly two centuries ago, an extensive iron furnace was in operation near Poolewe, but its fires became extinguished after consuming the greater part of the timaround it.

KINTAIL parish is bounded on the north and west by Lochalsh, on the south by Glenshiel, and on the east by Kilmorack. It is altogether a very mountainous district. In the village of DORNIE, in the above parish, has been erected, through the munificence of the late Duchess of Leeds, a beautiful Roman Catholic chapel, with schools attached.

APPLECROSS is a parish in the highlands of West Ross, on Applecross Bay, its size is about 15 miles in length and the same in breadth. The population is chiefly engaged in fishing.

GLENSHIEL is a parish near Loch Duich, in size it is 16 miles in length, by a breadth of two miles.

LOCHCARRON is a parish on Loch Carron, its size being 14 miles in length, its breadth five miles.

LOCHALSH is a parish 10 miles S.W. of Lochcarron. It is a large parish, being 28 miles in length, and eight in breadth, and abounds in red deer, game, &c.

INVERGORDON,

ROSSKEEN, ALNESS, EVANTON, KILMUIR EASTER, KILTEARN, AND LOGIE EASTER.

INVERGORDON is a thriving sea-port town in the parish of ROSKEEN, county of Ross; 12 miles S.S.W. from Tain, 13 N.N.E. from Dingwall, and 8 W. by N. from Cromarty, most eligibly seated on the north side of the fine bay of Cromarty, from whence there is a regular ferry to the opposite shore of the Frith. For the accommodation of persons crossing, a small pier was erected in 1821, partly at the expense of the county, and partly with the assistance of government, so that boats can now land their passengers at any time of the tide; but the most valuable and important improvement was conferred upon the port through the munificence and the public spirit of the proprietor, R. B. Æ. M'Leod, Esq., of Cadboll, who, at his own expense, constructed an excellent harbour, in 1828. This, for many years, owing to the central situation of the place, served for the landing of all the sea-borne goods for the eastern and western parts of Ross-shire, as well as for most districts of Sutherlandshire. In 1857 the accommodation was greatly increased by the erection of large wooden piers, extending several feet further into the channel, and which admitted of the steamers plying with Leith, London, &c., coming alongside. The extension, however, of railway communication to the town, in 1863, and subsequently further north, has for the present diverted a large portion of this traffic. The bay is perfectly commodious and safe, and capable of containing a large fleet, with anchorage of the best description, from which vessels never drive—the 'Souters of Cromarty' forming a natural mouth to one great harbour. The town has undergone considerable improvement of late years, and its appearance enlivened by the erection, in 1861, of a very handsome Free Church, capable of accommodating nearly a thousand sitters. The body of it is cruciform in shape, and there is a spire some 140 feet high, much admired for its handsome proportions. There are also some other excellent buildings, amongst which may be mentioned a handsome house and offices belonging to the Commercial Bank, and also several shops, which for elegance are not surpassed in the north of Scotland. The manufacture of hemp was once carried on in this town with very considerable spirit, by two establishments; nothing is now done in this branch of commerce. The principal public work at present is a bone crushing and manure manufacturing establishment, carried on in a set of buildings covering over an acre of ground, and employing some score of work-people. Few places possess greater attraction or convenience for sea-bathing than Invergordon; this circumstance, together with the salubrity of the climate, the comparatively short distance to the Strathpeffer mineral wells, now of so much celebrity, and its accommodations as a port, have combined to raise this once unimportant village into a station of consequence enjoyed by few places of its size. Two banking establishments are settled here—they are branches respectively of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' and the 'North of Scotland Bank.' There are several comfortable inns—the principal one, the 'Commercial,' in High-street, affording the best accommodation to tourists and travellers, is an excellent house. A justice of peace court is held monthly, and a sheriff court quarterly. In 1864, the town was taken under the provisions of 'Provost Lindsay's Police Act.' About one mile from the town is Invergordon Castle, where are some fine plantations. In November, 1801, the centre of the edifice was accidentally destroyed by fire; and that part has remained in a ruinous state since the unfortunate occurrence; the left wing of the building is the portion at present occupied by the family. The parish of Roskeen extends six miles along the Frith of Cromarty, and ten inland. The parish of Alness lies on the west, and Logie Easter on the east. The lower part of the parish, which lies along the Frith, and for about two miles back, forms a gentle and easy ascent towards the hills. A hill called Knock-Navie or Coldhill, divides the lower from the highland part of the parish. Beyond the upper arable ground and inhabited glens, is a very considerable range of mountains, applicable to no other purpose than that of pasturing black cattle or sheep. Like the adjacent parts of the shire, the parish has been greatly improved in agricultural capabilities, and now possesses some fine plantations, the chief of these being at Invergordon Castle, above noticed. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in February, the second Tuesday in April and December (old style), and the first Tuesday in August and October (old style).

KILMUIR EASTER is a parish four miles south from Tain, and on the west side of Cromarty Frith; its size is about ten miles in length by four in breadth. An Established and a Free Church are the places of worship.

KILTEARN is a parish six miles north-east of Dingwall, situated on Cromarty Frith; it is a large parish, being twenty miles in length, by a breadth of about six miles. An Established and a Free Church are in the parish.

ALNESS is a small village, partly in the parish of its name, and partly in that of Rosskeen, three miles from Invergordon, situated on both sides of the Alness (which river separates the two parishes), and on the north side of Cromarty Bay; the church is about half a mile from the village. The distillation of whisky is carried on extensively in this parish by two large establishments. The following fairs are held at Alness: on the second Tuesday in June, Wednesday before the third Thursday in July, and Wednesday after the third Tuesday in September.

LOGIE EASTER is a small parish, seven miles in length and two in breadth, situated in a fine hollow on the river Abhen: in the parish are mineral springs. The places of worship are an Established and a Free Church.

EVANTON is a rural village, about seven miles from Invergordon and four from Alness, situate, like the two latter places, on the North side of Cromarty Bay, and sheltered by a row of trees which defend it from the sea breeze. The church is about a mile distant. About two miles to the westward is Foulis-ferry, used for loading grain, timber, and cattle; and a mile north-east of the village is a deep ravine, called 'Aultgraade,' supposed to have been formed, at some very early period, by a mighty convulsion of nature. Fairs are held in this village on the first Tuesday in June and December.
